

Reflex control of the circulation

Sensory receptors

- Arterial baroreceptors
- Cardiac receptors
- Arterial chemoreceptor
- Muscle metaboreceptors

Definition of reflexes

Excitatory inputs e.g. arterial chemoreceptors, muscle metaboreceptors stimulate pressor responses. Pressor responses increase CO, TPR and BP

Inhibitory inputs e.g. arterial baroreceptors, cardiac-pulmonary receptors (pressure receptors in the atria, ventricles and pulmonary arteries) stimulate depressor responses. Depressor responses decrease CO, TPR and BP

Arterial baroreceptors

Baro means pressure so baroreceptors detect changes in pressure. Baroreceptors respond to stretch. A rise in arterial pressure stretches the artery wall which deforms and excites the receptors.

Blood flow and arterial baroreceptors

Arterial baroreceptors are vital to maintain blood flow to the brain and myocardium. Monitoring blood pressure tells us about blood flow.

Blood pressure and arterial baroreceptors

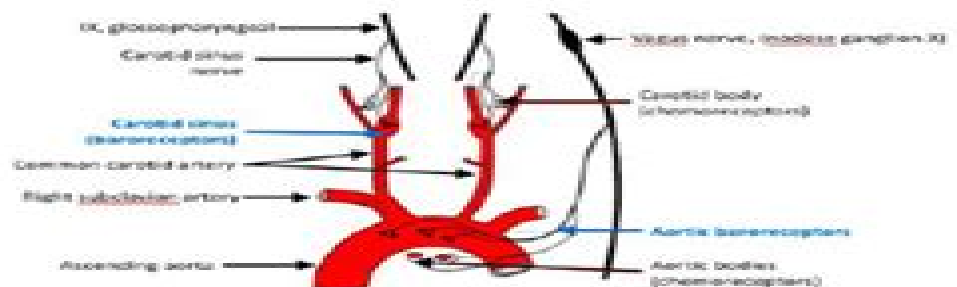

Lowering blood pressure means that CO or TPR has decreased. So, blood pressure indicates the blood flow.

$$Pa = CO \times TPR$$
$$\text{Blood flow}(CO) = Pa / TPR$$

Location of baroreceptors

Baroreceptors are found in the adventitia of the carotid sinus and the aortic arch. The carotid sinus is a thin walled dilation where the common carotid artery bifurcates into the internal and external carotid arteries.

Afferent sensory fibres from the carotid sinus baroreceptors form the carotid sinus nerve. The carotid sinus nerve joins the glossopharyngeal nerve and terminate in the NTS

Reflex Control of the Circulation Hermes A. Kontos, John L Patterson (Jr), MEDICAL COLL OF VIRGINIA RICHMOND DEPT OF MEDICINE., 1971 The need for regulation of cardiovascular function arises from the fact that the circulation does not operate continuously at maximum capacity which would obviously be a wasteful type of operation This is avoided by the provision of numerous control mechanisms which adjust cardiovascular function to the requirements of the tissues These control mechanisms may be broadly classified into local neural and hormonal mechanisms The local mechanisms are chemical or physical in nature and are concerned with the regulation of regional blood flow according to the functional requirements of each organ or tissue Neural control mechanisms are concerned with the maintenance of arterial blood pressure and the distribution of blood flow to various organs Because of the rapidity with which reflex neural mechanisms can effect changes in the function of the heart and changes in a large number of vascular beds they are particularly well suited to bring about the necessary alterations in cardiovascular function in emergency situations Hormonal mechanisms supplement neural controls but their effect is by and large slower and more sustained Author      Handbook of Physiology: Circulation (3 v. ), 1983 Section 1 Neurophysiology section 2 Circulation section 3 Respiration section 4 Adaptation to the environment section 5 Adipose tissue section 6 Alimentary canal      Circulation William Ferguson Hamilton, 1965
