Regional Inequality And Structural Changes:

Regional Inequality and Structural Changes Eduardo A. Haddad, 2018-10-26 Published in 1999 The liberalization process in Latin America during the 1990s resulted in the increase and diversification of trade in the region Brazil as a major player strengthened its insertion into the world economy through the adoption of strategies for opening up markets and of new production technologies complemented more recently by the creation of a broadly based stabilization plan In this context issues related to structural changes in the economy such as those involving the complexity of new international trading agreements and their impact on the Brazilian economy warrant special attention The results of this study suggest that the interplay of market forces in the Brazilian economy favour the more developed region of the country Growth, Structural Change and Regional Inequality in Malaysia Asan Ali Golam Hassan, 2017-11-30 Economic development in the long run is seen as a process of structural change that is affected by economic growth Malaysia is one of the middle income economies that are going through rapid structural change Since the mid 1980s it has changed to an industrially based economy with large scale export of electrical and electronic components However thirty years after Malaysia's redistributive policies have been exercised regional inequality still exists This book examines the nature and impact of regional policies in relation to the patterns of demographic and economic structural change and in relation to growth distribution and income disparities across regions in Peninsular Malaysia The book also explores the degree to which differences in regional manufacturing distribution and concentration have contributed to regional inequality It concludes with a number of recommendations for regional policies that will reduce this inequality Regional Inequality and Structural Changes in the Brazilian Economy Eduardo Amaral Haddad, 1998 Das regionale Entwicklungsgefälle Karl Dieter Klages, 1975 Regional Inequality and Regional Policy in Thailand Mike Douglass, 1990 Structural Change and Income Distribution Guanghua Wan, 2017 This study explores the relationship between inequality and structural transformation by constructing a theoretical model developing analytical frameworks and implementing a case study The general equilibrium model we develop demonstrates that inequality exhibits an inverted U shape as structural change proceeds from onset to completion Our analytical frameworks enable decomposition of total inequality into sector contributions and a change in total inequality into a component attributable to structural transformation and the other component to concentration or spatial agglomeration Applying the decomposition frameworks to data from the People's Republic of China yield various interesting findings and more importantly confirms the inverted U shape as predicted by our theoretical model Regional Inequality and Development Arne Bigsten, 1980 Monograph comprising a case study of regional disparity income distribution and balanced regional development in Kenya covers historical background to inequality economic structure regionalization of the national level input output table production and estimated demand by sector and region employment population rural migration incomes etc and discusses results of a simulation economic model input output analysis as well as effects of various

Regional Disparities in Small Countries Daniel Felsenstein, 2005-05-09 This book challenges the common perception that significant regional disparities do not exist in small countries As small developed countries become increasingly competitive and their economic structures resemble those of the large a re assessment of the regional consequences of these changes is of timely importance Regional Disparities in Small Countries presents a systematic discussion of the unique theoretical methodological and measurement challenges in analyzing regional inequalities in small countries and a series of empirical analyses addressing the issue of regional convergence and divergence in these countries With contributions from leading regional scientists and economists this book also examines the policy experience of small countries in closing regional gaps and the effectiveness of public interventions in this field see Reviews

Coping with Regional Inequality in Sweden Kerstin Enflo, Joan Ramón Rosés, 2015 In many countries regional income inequality has followed an inverted U shaped curve growing during industrialization and market integration and declining thereafter By contrast Sweden s regional inequality dropped from 1860 to 1980 and did not exhibit this U shaped pattern Accordingly today s regional income inequality in Sweden is lower than in other European countries We note that the prime mover behind the long run reduction in regional income differentials was structural change whereas neoclassical and technological forces played a relatively less important role However this process of regional income convergence can be divided into three major periods During the first period 1860 1940 the unrestricted action of market forces particularly the expansion of markets and high rates of internal and international migration led to the compression of regional income differentials During the next period 1940 80 regional convergence was even more intense In this period institutional arrangements favoured the reduction of productivity differentials across industries and successive governments aided the reallocation of the workforce from declining to thriving regions and economic sectors During the last period 1980 2000 when regional incomes diverged internal migration and structural change slowed Furthermore the development of knowledge intensive service industries favoured economic growth in the main metropolitan areas
