

Pioneering peace pathways

Three ways to initiate inclusive and sustainable peace processes

1. Elevate inclusion

What? Support diverse pathways for dialogue and conflict resolution among different configurations of armed and unarmed groups early on in a peace process, as well as supporting engagement between primary conflict parties (such as recognition or 'talks about talks').

Why? Conventional peace process design prioritises the interests of the primary conflict parties from the start. Parties' central leaderships often set the direction, pace, and agenda – from secretive 'pre-talks', through single-track peace negotiations and into implementation. This model narrows opportunities for broader inclusion and effective representation of diverse views and interests across society.

How? Map competing interests and claims of different groups and constituencies within them as the basis for navigating tensions and identifying entry points and pathways for peaceful change. Scale up gender-sensitive conflict analysis to map different forms of violent exclusion and identify pro-peace agents among diverse population and identity groups inclusive of women and young people. Use information technology to engage excluded or remote communities in dialogue. Support local peace networks to cultivate 'bottom-up' diplomacy and dialogue within and outside conflict parties.

2. Prepare conflict parties for inclusive dialogue

What? Provide consistent support and accompaniment to help conflict parties make the 'quantum leap' into peace dialogue in ways that open the door for inclusion and contribute to more credible and sustainable political change.

Why? State and non-state conflict parties alike are often ill-prepared for, or ill-disposed to, dialogue. Conflict parties become invested in polarised politics within narrow constituencies, and with maximal and inflexible goals. Media, and particularly social media, is increasingly misused with the effect of exacerbating conflict divides. This impedes trust-building including by demonising the opposition as terrorists who cannot be negotiated with, and the sowing of disruptive and often incendiary 'fake news'. Such polarisation can impede the readiness of conflict parties to engage in dialogue and can derail a process once started.

How? Reframe victory as reaching a dignified negotiated – rather than military – solution. Expand pro-peace elements within conflict parties and their wider constituencies and help maintain cohesion through the process of transitioning to dialogue – for example, by engaging with nonviolent movements and diaspora to build pro-dialogue momentum. Through enhancing engagement skills and techniques, third parties can support conflict parties to reach out beyond their core support base and to broaden their political vision from a warfighting agenda. Anticipate legal or regulatory factors, including proscription regimes and sanctions, that may inhibit emerging dialogue and build changes into accompaniment strategies.

3. Support nonviolent mobilisation and local mediators

What? Bolster the involvement in early peacemaking of nonviolent movements and pro-peace civil society and local mediators.

Why? Nonviolent mobilisation can help to stimulate dialogue and more inclusive peace processes that are responsive to populations' interests, and to facilitate alternative channels for political engagement and influence. But political and legal space for civil society mobilisation is shrinking and ways to stymie nonviolent dissent are growing, increasingly under the cover of Covid-19 restrictions.

How? Work with nonviolent movements to identify their skills and knowledge gaps, including in strategic planning, and provide tailored support factoring in informal and loose structures. Elevate women's roles and leadership, building on clear evidence that greater women's participation is more likely to achieve peaceful aims and resist resort to violence. Mitigate risks in engaging with nonviolent movements, such as where mobilisation contributes to instability or exacerbates exclusion, by thoroughly mapping their objectives and networks and applying Do No Harm principles.

Zones of Peace Landon E. Hancock, Christopher Roger Mitchell, 2007 Looks at the ways people have used sanctuary throughout history and in present day conflicts to avoid or challenge violence Authors with practical experience in peace zones throughout Asia Europe Africa and Latin America The notion of having sanctuary from violence or threat has probably existed as long as conflict itself Whether people seek safety in a designated location such as a church or hospital or over a regional border or whether their professions or life situations doctors children allow them at least in theory to avoid injury in war sanctuary has served as a powerful symbol of non violence The authors of this collection examine sanctuary as it relates to historical and modern conflicts from the Philippines to Colombia and Sudan They chart the formation and evolution of these varied zones of peace and attempt to arrive at a theory of sanctuary that might allow for new and useful peacebuilding strategies This book makes a significant contribution to the field of conflict resolution using case studies to highlight efforts made by local people to achieve safety and democracy amid and following violent civil wars The authors ground the emerging interest in sanctuary by providing a much needed description of the complexity of these peace zones Other Contributors Kevin Avruch Pushpa Iyer Roberto Jose Jennifer Langdon Nancy Morrison Krista Rigalo Catalina Rojas and Mery Rodriguez

The Chinchaga Firestorm Cordy Tymstra, 2015-08-16 In 1950 the biggest firestorm documented in North America one fire alone burned 3 500 000 acres of boreal forest in northern Alberta and British Columbia created the world's largest smoke layer in the atmosphere. The smoke travelled half way around the northern hemisphere and made the moon and sun appear blue. The Chinchaga Firestorm is an historical study of the effects of fire on the ecological process. Using technical explanations and archival discoveries the author shows the beneficial yet destructive effects of many forest fires including the 2011 devastation of Slave Lake Alberta. Cordy Tymstra tells the stories of communities and individuals as their lives intersected with the path of the Chinchaga River Fire stories that demonstrate people's spirit resourcefulness self sufficiency and their persistence in the struggle against nature's immense power. The 1950 event changed the way these fires are fought in Alberta and elsewhere. The Chinchaga Firestorm will appeal to wildland fire scientists foresters forest ecologists and policy makers as well as those who are interested in western Canadian history and ecology.
