Newbery, Centre for Economic Policy Research (Great Britain), 1995 This book takes stock of the first five years of fiscal reform in the transitional economies of Central and Eastern Europe comparing the structures of taxation and expenditure between countries with the European Union and over time The research concentrates on the experience of the Visegrad nations Hungary Poland and the Czech and Slovak Republics since these countries were in the forefront of the transitional process and have made the most progress with tax reform They all also have a strong statistical tradition that allows the transition process to be studied in great detail going beyond the macro aggregates to probe the efficiency and distributional impact of reforms at the household and enterprise level the studies analyze survey data ranging in size from several hundred enterprises to over 100 000 individuals The book divides into three pairs of chapters the first pair examines the impact of tax and benefit reforms on households the second deals with the taxation of enterprises in many ways the pivot of tax reform and the sector presenting some of the greatest challenges and the third focuses on the critical area of labour market policy where institutions have had to be created from virtually nothing in a very short period Taken together these contributions teach important lessons about the design sequencing and impact of tax and benefit reforms not only for further reforms in the Visegrad nations but also for countries further east      Final Generic Environmental Impact Statement on Uranium Milling, Project M-25: Summary and text U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission.
