This is a group project which will involve the use of computer programs to both model and analyze thermochemical data. You are to use SigmaPlot or Excel programs found on the computers in G-222C to construct all plots; You may use either SigmaPlot, QuattroPro or Excel spreadsheets to perform the calculations. You must turn in clearly labeled graphs and spreadsheet tables with your final report. You are to save all this information on a new 3.5" floppy disk. This disk should only be used on these computers.

This is a group project and only one report will be turned in for the entire group; however, it is important that each individual contribute substantially and equitably to this project. Therefore, complete the following project applying the graphing and computer skills learned in the Principles Laboratory. Submit a report with a coversheet that clearly indicates an appropriate title, the date submitted and the coauthors of this report. The next two pages must include these two pages of this handout. The body of this report should be broken down into sections which answer each of the problems noted below. Be sure to clearly show your answer for each problem and give a concise rationale for your answer. Show which equations that you used in your transforms. At the end of the report, each student should write a paragraph describing what they contributed to this project and then sign below that paragraph. Each of their partners should then initial below this signature if they agree with their partner's assessment. This assignment must be turned in at the beginning of the lab period of the week of November 28th.
