Second Language Acquisition And The Critical Period Hypothesis:

Second Language Acquisition and the Critical Period Hypothesis David Birdsong, 1999 Second Language Acquisition and the Critical Period Hypothesis is the only book on the market to provide a diverse collection of perspectives from experienced researchers on the role of the Critical Period Hypothesis in second language acquisition. It is widely believed that age effects in both first and second language acquisition are developmental in nature with native levels of attainment in both to be though possible only if learning began before the closure of a window of opportunity a critical or sensitive period. These seven chapters explore this idea at length with each contribution acting as an authoritative look at various domains of inquiry in second language acquisition including syntax morphology phonetics phonology Universal Grammar and neurofunctional factors. By presenting readers with an evenly balanced take on the topic with viewpoints both for and against the Critical Period Hypothesis this book is the ideal guide to understanding this critical body of research in SLA for students and researchers in Applied Linguistics and Second Language Acquisition.

The Age Factor in Second Language Acquisition David Michael Singleton, Zolt Lengyel, 1995-01-01 This book takes a hard look at some of the assumptions that are customarily made concerning the role of age in second language acquisition. The evidence and arguments the contributors present run counter to the notion that an early start in second language learning is of itself either absolutely sufficient or necessary for the attainment of native like mastery of a second language. Another theme of the book is a doubt that there is a particular stage of maturity beyond which language learning is no longer fully possible. In short the book presents a challenge to those who take it as given that second language learning is inevitably different in its essential nature from language acquisition in the childhood years and that second language knowledge acquired beyond the critical period is in all circumstances and in all respects doomed to fossilize at a non native like level.

The Critical Period Hypothesis Sabine Starzer, 2013-11-25 Seminar paper from the year 2013 in the subject English Language and Literature Studies Linguistics grade 2 University of Vienna Anglistik course Proseminar Linguistik language English abstract When it comes to learning a language there seems to be a certain period in which a child must acquire the basic competences in order to be able to understand and use language. This window of opportunity is also called critical period and has been the subject of much research over the last decades. Especially for future language teachers the question about the existence of such a critical period for second language acquisition as well arises. This paper examines the actual research on critical period for second language acquisition and sheds light on the on going academic discussion. The paper proceeds as follows: section 2 provides a short description of the Critical Period Hypothesis and sheds light on biological and neurological aspects of language learning. In section 3 recent findings of research according to critical periods in second language acquisition are presented and discussed. Section 4 contains a list with personal characteristics and strategies having emerged out of different studies. These characteristics might help second language learners to gain more success in their goal to reach the status of native speakers This of course can also be useful for language teachers who want to support their learners Section 5 provides a short conclusion Is there a Critical Period Hypothesis in Second Language Acquisition? Jochen

Fossilization in Adult Second Language Acquisition Zhaohong Han, 2004 This book is a systematic attempt to address the issue of fossilization in relation to a fundamental question in second language acquisition research which is why are learners adults in particular unable to develop the level of competence they have aspired to in spite of continuous and sustained exposure to the target language adequate motivation to learn and sufficient opportunity to practice Is There a Sensitive Period in Second Language Learning? is a widespread belief that the acquisition of a foreign language is much easier for children rather than for adults. It is said that the younger the learner the better the outcome will be. The same applies for the assumption that an adult learner of a foreign language cannot reach native like competence no matter how long the process of acquisition will take whereas a child indeed can acquire a perfect language without even the hint of a foreign accent. Furthermore there is a common notion that the age of onset of the acquisition of a second language plays a role in its further development. Indeed the acquisition of a foreign language can be a frustrating and very tough experience for adults in whereas it seems to be a facile and fast proceeding process for children or adolescents. A possible answer to these beliefs may be found in the Critical Period Hypothesis which states that the age is a major factor for second language acquisition henceforth SLA and that there is a time span where the acquisition of a language functions best. On the other hand there are studies which want to make clear that in fact the contrary is true or as well that age has no influence at all when it comes to SLA. This paper aims to find out if there indeed is a connection between the learner's age and his level of proficiency in the L2.

The Age Factor in Second Language Acquisition Carina Kröger, 2016-12-05 Seminar paper from the year 2008 in the subject Didactics for the subject English Pedagogy Literature Studies grade 1-3 University of Cologne Englisch course Problems in Second Language Acquisition language English abstract This term paper will focus on the discussion of the putative maturational constraints for second language acquisition. The age factor is an aspect of first and second language acquisition research which has engendered very much controversy. In the discussion about age related effects on language acquisition one can find disagreements as to both the facts and to their possible explanations. The different points of view range from the notion that young learners are in all aspects of language learning more efficient and achieve better results to the contrary position that older learners are the better learners. In this paper four of the positions concerning the age factor which have been listed by Singleton will be presented because they provide a good overview of the different views on this topic and the respective evidence belonging to them. Many of the differences in the results of various studies are due to the differences in how the results are elicited. The experimental design plays an important role for the outcomes.

The age factor in second language acquisition Felix B., 2014-10-22 Seminar paper from the year 2010 in the subject English Language and Literature Studies Linguistics grade 1-3 Ernst Moritz Arndt University of Greifswald course Language Acquisition language English abstract Human beings have the capacity to acquire not only a mother tongue but also second or third languages. Consequently it is not unusual that we find much more bilingual and multilingual individuals than monolingual in our world today. Broad levels of population deal with different languages in addition to their mother tongue and this knowledge is more and more seen as normal in nearly every area of life. The potential for acquiring second languages seems to last throughout one's lifetime but depends on many variables. According to Muriel Saville Troike individual learners acquire second languages differently in consequence of influencing factors like age sex aptitude motivation cognitive style personality or learning strategies Age as an effective factor in second language acquisition is thereby one of the most controversy variables and recurring themes The question of whether and how age affects this acquiring process has been a major issue in second language research since its establishment This paper should examine the relationship of the age to second language acquisition Therefore a number of several studies provide different point of views and some of them will be specified in this paper The structure is based on the book Language Acquisition The Age Factor by David Singleton and Lisa Ryan 2004 which was also used as main source In conclusion a critical review on the several positions will be carried out to see whether there is an optimal age to start acquiring a second language or not and whether a critical period hypothesis in second language acquisition exists or not

Second Language Acquisition and the Younger Learner Jenefer Philp, Rhonda Oliver, Alison Mackey, 2008 This new volume of work highlights the distinctiveness of child SLA through a collection of different types of empirical research specific to younger learners Characteristics of children's cognitive emotional and social development distinguish their experiences from those of adult L2 learners creating intriguing issues for SLA research and also raising important practical questions regarding effective pedagogical techniques for learners of different ages While child SLA is often typically thought of as simple and often enjoyable and universally effortless in other words as child's play the complex portraits of young second language learners which emerge in the 16 papers collected in this book invite the reader to reconsider the reality for many younger learners Chapters by internationally renowned authors together with reports by emerging researchers describe second and foreign language learning by children ranging from pre schoolers to young adolescents in home and school contexts with caregivers peers and teachers as interlocutors

The Critical Period and Second Language Acquisition Thu Hoang Tran, 2009 Learning a second or foreign language is a long and time consuming process and not all language learners may be able to achieve a very high level of proficiency in the target language It is even rarer to find second or foreign language learners who can use the target language as well as native speakers of the language Researchers in the field of second language acquisition SLA have long been concerned with the factors that prevent learners from attaining such a successful level of language learning Among various factors that have been empirically investigated age has seemed to figure prominently in the literature The critical period hypothesis CPH has been proposed to explicate the reason why adult language learners are unable to achieve native like proficiency This paper aims at providing a brief overview of the CPH First the origin of the CPH is pointed out Second studies that support the CPH and those that attempt to falsify the CPH are discussed respectively It is argued that although it is hard for adult learners to attain native like proficiency in another language it may still be possible Moreover the importance of finding out if the CPH is true or not may not be as important as trying to help learners to use the language more effectively It is concluded that helping learners to communicate effectively in the target language is more logically and realistic than trying to help them to emulate native speakers of the target language Age as a Factor in Second Language Acquisition Jasmina Murad, 2009 Seminar paper from the year 2006 in the subject English Language and Literature Studies Linguistics grade 1,0 Free

University of Berlin Institute for English Linguistics course Second Language Acquisition 23 entries in the bibliography language English abstract One of the central questions that SLA has tried to answer is why learners of a non native language L2 evince such a high degree of interindividual variation in their final attainment relative to the L2 components and skills they have acquired In order to offer a satisfactory response to this key issue SLA researchers have posited the existence of a set of individual factors of a very different nature such as aptitude motivation attitude personality and intelligence among others that might explain such variation However one of the most obvious potential explanations for the lack of success of L2 learners compared to L1 learners is that the acquisition of a foreign language begins at a later age than that of the mother tongue does Thus it has been prevalently assumed that age itself is a predictor of second language proficiency This paper focuses on research which has been carried out on maturational constraints for SLA and hereby tries to find answers to various questions concerning age as a factor in SLA
