Abstract

Constituency development fund was adopted by the government of Kenya in 2003 as a people centered approach to development. The study examined the challenges in strategy implementation on performance of Constituency Development fund Projects and established measures. The research questions were: to what extent did leadership, cultural receptivity, structural facilitation and communication posed a challenge to the performance of Constituency Development Fund projects? And what measures should be taken? It adopted descriptive research design. Targeted 263 Management Committees. Stratified random sampling was used to select 79 respondents. Questionnaire and Interview Guide were used to collect data. Descriptive statistics was used for data analysis. The findings were leadership, cultural receptivity, structural factors and communication were identified to be challenges to performance of projects. Measures established included training of various committees through workshops, incorporating well educated people in various committees, involving all stakeholders in the implementation processes and adopting effective and efficient methods of transferring information. The study recommended the need for management to develop an organizational culture that allows successful implementation of Constituency Development Fund projects.

1. Introduction

1.1 Background to the Problem

The success of a project is critical to achieving development agenda in the local communities across the world. It is also understood that implementation of projects is fundamental if the project objectives and success are to be achieved. Various projects could be initiated to transform social, political and economic well-being of citizens in a particular country. To address various economic injustices and low development levels in Kenya since independence, the Government of Kenya has initiated various reforms aimed at transforming the country to a middle-income country by 2030.

1.2 Concept of Strategy Implementation

Strategy implementation involves organization of the firm's resources and motivation of the staff to achieve objectives. The environmental conditions facing many firms have changed rapidly. Today's global competitive environment is complex, dynamic, and largely unpredictable. To deal with this unprecedented level of change, a lot of thought has been focused on strategy implementation. Strategic management is about managing the future and effective strategy implementation is crucial as it directs the attention and actions of an organization. The assessment of strategy implementation processes becomes crucial for practitioners and researchers alike in order to conduct and evaluate different implementation processes (Thompson et al. 2007).

In recent years, organizations have sought to create greater organizational flexibility in responding to environmental turbulence by moving away from hierarchical structures to more modular forms (Balogun, 2003). Responsibility, resources and power in firms have been the subject of decentralization. Given an intensifying competitive environment, it is regularly asserted that the critical determinant in the success and, definitely, the survival of the

Distributive Politics in Developing Countries Mark Baskin, Michael L. Mezey, 2014-10-23 This book explores the increasing use of Constituency Development Funds (CDFs) in emerging democratic governments in Africa, Asia, the Caribbean, and Oceania. CDFs dedicate public money to benefit parliamentary constituencies through allocations and/or spending decisions influenced by Members of Parliament (MPs). The contributors employ the term CDF as a generic term, although such funds have different names such as electoral development funds (Papua New Guinea), constituency development catalyst funds (Tanzania), or Member of Parliament Local Area Development Fund (India), etc. In some ways, the funds resemble the ad hoc pork barrel policy making employed in the U.S. Congress for the past 200 years. However, unlike earmarks, CDFs generally become institutionalized in the government's annual budget and are distributed according to different criteria in each country. They enable MPs to influence programs in their constituencies that finance education and build bridges, roads, community centers, clinics, and schools. In this sense, a CDF is a politicized form of spending that can help fill in the important gaps in government services in constituencies that have not been addressed in the government's larger comprehensive policy programs. This first comprehensive treatment of CDFs in the academic and development literatures emerges from a project at the State University of New York Center for International Development. This project has explored CDFs in 19 countries and has developed indicators on their emergence, operations, and oversight. The contributors provide detailed case studies of the emergence and operations of CDFs in Kenya, Uganda, Jamaica, and India, as well as an analysis of earmarks in the U.S. Congress and a broader analysis of the emergence of the funds in Africa. They cover the emergence, institutionalization, and accountability of these funds, analyze key issues in their operations, and offer provisional conclusions of what the emergence and operations of these funds say about the democratization of politics in developing countries and current approaches to international support for democratic governance in developing countries. Statebuilding and State Formation in the Western Pacific Matthew Allen, Sinclair Dinnen, 2018-04-19 This book provides a rigorous and cross-disciplinary analysis of this Melanesian nation at a critical juncture in its post-colonial and post-conflict history, with contributions from leading scholars of Solomon Islands. The notion of transition, as used to describe the recent drawdown of the decade-long Regional Assistance Mission to Solomon Islands (RAMSI), provides a departure point for considering other transformations: social, political, and economic, under way in the archipelagic nation. Organised around a central tension between change and continuity, two of the book's key themes are the contested narratives of changing state-society relations and the changing social relations around land and natural resources engendered by ongoing processes of globalisation and urbanisation. Drawing heuristically on RAMSI's genesis in the state-building moment that dominated international relations during the first decade of this century, the book also examines the critical distinction between state building and state formation in the

Solomon Islands context It engages with global scholarly and policy debates on issues such as peacebuilding state building legal pluralism hybrid governance globalisation urbanisation and the governance of natural resources These themes resonate well beyond Solomon Islands and Melanesia and the book will be of interest to a wide range of students scholars and development practitioners This book was previously published as a special issue of The Journal of Pacific History
