Kinematics: The Mathematics of Motion

2.1 Motion in One Dimension

1. Sketch position-versus-time graphs for the following motions. Include a numerical scale on both axes with units that are reasonable for this motion. Some numerical information is given in the problems, but for other quantities make reasonable estimates.

Note: A sketch of a graph simply means hand-drawn, rather than carefully measured and laid out with a ruler. But a sketch should still be neat and as accurate as is feasible by hand. It also should include labelled axes and, if appropriate, tick-marks and numerical scales along the axes.

- a. A student walks to the bus stop, waits for the bus, then rides to campus. Assume that all the motion is along a straight street.

- b. A student walks slowly to the bus stop, realizes he forgot his paper that is due, and quickly walks home to get it.

- c. The quarterback drops back 10 yards from the line of scrimmage, then throws a pass 20 yards to the tight end, who catches it and sprints 20 yards to the goal. Draw your graph for the football. Think carefully about what the slopes of the lines should be.
