Cognition and Recognition Leon A. H. G. J. Rademaker, 1981-07-27 The Physiology of Standing Das Stehen was first published in 1981 Minnesota Archive Editions uses digital technology to make long unavailable books once again accessible and are published unaltered from the original University of Minnesota Press editions This is the first English translation of Das Stehen a classic work by the Dutch physiologist G G J Rademaker 1887 1957 professor at the Universities of Utrecht and Leiden Written in German Das Stehen was published in Berlin in 1931 Rademaker who began his medical career as a surgeon became interested in the physiology of the nervous system he initiated research into the long term survival of animals following removal of the cerebellum and later of animals after removal of both cerebral hemispheres Based on these studies of decerebellate dogs and cats Das Stehen was primarily an analysis of cerebellar defect but had much wider significance in relation to the neurological mechanisms of righting standing and equilibrium Das Stehen contains a wealth of carefully documented information defining with exactitude the part played by the many cutaneous proprioceptive and labyrinthine reactions that are fundamental to the regulation of posture and equilibrium Rademaker discovered that the cerebellum is not in fact an essential part of the mechanism of any of the labyrinthine reactions an extraordinary finding and that the exaggeration of various reactions following removal of the cerebellum revealed its essentially modulating function Subsequent work on primates has shown that his findings in decerebellate dogs have universal applicability This translation was prepared for the National Library of Medicine and the National Science Foundation Editor D Denny Brown professor of neurology emeritus at Harvard University has also provided a foreword to the book The Physiology of Standing will be of value to researchers in neurology neurophysiology and the special senses those whose interests lie in motor coordination and cerebellar and labyrinthine function Subject Catalog, 1981 Library of Congress, 1981 School Education , 1899 University Catalog University of Northern Iowa, 1992 Documents of the Assembly of the State of New York New York (State).
