A Handbook for Training Strategy Martyn Sloman, 2017-07-05 When the first edition of Martyn Sloman s Handbook appeared it made an immediate impact on the HRD community Its starting point was the idea that traditional approaches to training in the organization were no longer effective The Handbook introduced a new model and set out the practical implications The world of HRD has moved on and Martyn Sloman has now drastically revised the text to reflect the increased complexity of organizational life and the many recent developments in the field His aim remains the same to help readers to develop a framework in which training can be effectively managed and delivered In Part I of the text the author draws attention to the opportunities created for training by the current emphasis on competition through people In Part II he poses the question What should training managers be doing to ensure that training in their organization is as good as it can be Here he stresses the need to keep training aligned with business objectives and to encourage line managers to work alongside the human resource professionals The third and final Part considers the trainer as a strategic facilitator and examines the skills required Martyn Sloman writes as an experienced training manager and his book is concerned above all with implementation Thus the text is supported by questionnaires survey instruments and specimen documents With its combination of thought provoking argument and practical guidance the Handbook will continue to serve all those with an interest in organizational training

Evaluating Business and Industry Training Leslie Steven May, Carol Ann Moore, Stephen J. Zammit, 2012-12-06 In the abstract training is seen as valuable by most people in business and industry However in the rush of providing training programs on time and within budget evaluation of training is frequently left behind as a nice to have addition if practical In addition the training function itself is left with the dilemma of proving its worth to management without a substantive history of evaluation This book is designed to provide managers educators and trainers alike the opportunity to explore the issues and benefits of evaluating business and industry training The purpose is to motivate more effective decisions for training investments based on information about the value of training in attaining business goals Without evaluation the value of specific training efforts cannot be adequately measured the value of training investments overall cannot be fully assessed and the contributions of the training function to the corporation s goals cannot be duly recognized Articles are grouped into three sections although many themes appear across sections The first section establishes the context of training evaluation in a business organization The second section emphasizes evaluation of training products and services and the third section discusses costs and benefits of evaluation and communication and use of evaluation results in decision making In Section I the context of training evaluation is established from a variety of perspectives First training and training evaluation are discussed in the context of corporate strategic goals

Setting the Course Institute of Medicine, Division of Health Care Services, Committee on the Immunization Finance Dissemination Workshops, 2002-09-17 Immunization is essential to disease prevention efforts in public health but the U S health care system faces financial challenges that are affecting the delivery of immunization services An earlier report from the Institute of Medicine IOM Calling the Shots Immunization Finance Policies and Practices pointed to the instability of the fundamental infrastructure that supports immunization programs throughout the United States including growing financial burdens and operational complexities in immunization services shortcomings in public and private sector investments in vaccine purchases and immunization programs and fluctuations in insurance plans in the public and private health care sectors that create uncertainties regarding coverage of vaccine purchase and service delivery arrangements In October 2001 a group of about 50 health officials public health experts health care providers health plan representatives and purchasers state legislative officials and community leaders met at the Texas Medical Association in Austin to explore the implications of the IOM findings and recommendations for Texas The 1 day workshop was the second in a series of four meetings organized by IOM with support from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention to foster informed discussions about challenges for immunization finance and future strategies for strengthening immunization activities and the public health infrastructure that supports those activities This report of the Austin workshop summarizes the findings of the previous IOM report and reviews continuing challenges in immunization finance for the nation and for individual states with a particular focus on Texas The report also highlights strategies proposed by individual workshop participants that can be used to address those challenges Several presenters and discussants emphasized that adequate funding is necessary for immunization programs but that financial resources alone are not sufficient to guarantee success Similarly they indicated that no single agency or group in the public or the private sector should expect or should be expected to solve immunization problems Speakers from both public and private health agencies observed that collaboration consultation and partnership efforts across levels of government and between the public and private sectors are essential
