

Political Thought: summary

1. Democracy and (in)equality

What is Political Thought?

- A compromise between political theory and political philosophy
- Political philosophy:
 - Traditional name for the branch of philosophy that deals with politics
 - Plato, Aristoteles, Aquinas, Machiavelli, Grotius, Locke, Rousseau, Mill, etc...
 - Traditional question: the legitimization of authority and the best political organization
 - In this course: the evolution of this question
 - Is there something like a 'best', an 'ideal' or a 'perfect' political organization?
 - According to the 'true' human nature? To the laws of History? To religious revelation? To the rational organization of society? According to what?
 - Underlying questions
 - Philosophers try to explain the 'best' society with arguments (these are very important)
 - Why these criteria (the sub questions)?
- Political theory:
 - Reaction to the abstract and universalist perspective of political philosophy
 - After WWII: need for thinking what happened and perplexity of classical philosophy
 - Hannah Arendt among others decided to call herself a political theorist
 - Why? Underline that political theory:
 - Is made by an individual in a definite social context
 - Is context dependent. We ask different questions at different times
 - Example: Arendt and the Holocaust, the question of slavery, or feminism / black lives matter
 - Political theory INSERT
- Political thought:
 - An englobing Compromise: relies on the corpus of political philosophy in order to critically think on justice, democracy, borders, inequalities, rights, etc.
 - Philosophy?
 - Philosophy as a set of beliefs (a philosophy)
 - Philosophy as 'boring' books
 - Philosophy as an activity of interrogation
 - Goal of this course: combine the three. Read classical texts in order to stimulate your own critical thinking on democracy, inequalities, justice, etc.
 - Philosophy is intrinsically critical: why are things/representations as they are? We need to question 'evidence's and 'axioms'

Democracy:

- How to define democracy?
- Problem: the term "democracy" is used in very different contexts and has multiple meanings
 - As a descriptor: a democratic regime, decision, assembly, etc.
 - As an indicator of political legitimacy (this is not democratic!)
