Computer Games II David N.L. Levy, 1988-06-24 Long before the advent of the electronic computer man was fascinated by the idea of automating the thought processes employed in playing games of skill. The very first chess Automaton captured the imagination of late eighteenth century Vienna and by the early 1900s there was a genuine machine that could play the chess endgame of king and rook against a lone king. Soon after the invention of the computer scientists began to make a serious study of the problems involved in programming a machine to play chess. Within a decade this interest started to spread first to draughts checkers and later to many other strategy games. By the time the home computer was born there had already been three decades of research into computer games. Many of the results of this research were published though usually in publications that are extremely difficult or even impossible for most people to find. Hence the present volumes. Interest in computers and programming has now reached into almost every home in the civilized world. Millions of people have regular access to computers and most of them enjoy playing games. In fact approximately 80 percent of all software sold for use on personal computers is games software.
