American Aberdeen-Angus Herd-book American Aberdeen-Angus Breeders' Association, 1960 American Aberdeen-Angus Herd Book American Angus Association, 1953 The Rebellion of the Princess Mary Imlay Taylor, FROM my post at the window I could look down upon the court yard of the palace of the Boyar Kurakin Although it was early in May it was a cold day in Moscow and the sun shone obliquely into the yard cut off as it was by the walls of two houses The black mud of winter had not dried off the centre of the court and there was ice in the corner by the water butts and ice hung too on the north side of the roof under the eaves like the ragged beard of the old man of the north Moroz Treskun or the Crackling Frost as the moujik names him while above around the great chimney a group of ravens were huddled together in the sun preening their plumage and croaking now and then in a solemn fashion The boyar s house was large and shaped like a Greek cross the kitchen and the servants quarters opening on the court which was crowded now with the serfs for the steward of the household was giving one of the varlets a taste of the whip The doors and windows of the kitchen gaped wide filled with curious spectators some I fancied half in sympathy with the poor rogue who squealed under the lash and others applauding the major domo whether from fear or love I knew not He was a burly fellow with a red head and a short red bearded fierce eyed countenance and had the serf by the waistband with one giant hand and with the other he laid the whip on his bare back leaving a long welt across the brown flesh with every cut The slave howled and writhed the whip cracked the spectators applauded or jeered as fancy seized them and then quite suddenly there was a diversion The water butts were in the corner at the steward s back and a dwarf darted out from behind them quick as a wasp and cut at the major domo s calves with a leather thong and was back under cover before the big man could wheel around And he thinking that he had cut his own legs with the long end of his lash and furious at the titter of the servants laid it on the poor serf with redoubled venom until the blood ran Meanwhile the dwarf executed a weird dance of triumph on the ice by the water butts mocking the steward in dumb show and beating an imaginary victim his thin cheeks blown out and his brows knotted to the delight of his audience thus furnished with a double entertainment He was one of those wretched little creatures that haunted Moscow the playthings and spies of the courtiers and he was unusually small even for a dwarf with a strange pointed face white and three cornered like a patch of paper and with great ears shaped like the leaves of a linden standing out from his head as if upon stems it was by these ears that I always knew him afterwards even in the crowd of court midgets Encouraged by the success and the private applause the little wretch darted out again and repeated the performance of whipping the steward s legs while the men and women held their sides with laughter because the fat beast danced and swore and lashed like one beside himself But it was an ill jest for the rogue in his clutches and minded to end their sport I shouted to him in Russ to look behind the water butts for the wasp The fat fool gaped at me in amazement and the dwarf darting from his covert was running full speed for the kitchen before he spied him and made after him But one of the men willing to save the little beast no doubt for the sake of the laugh tripped the major domo as if by accident and down he went in the mud of the court yard
