

CLEANING, DISINFECTING, & SANITIZING

PROPER CLEANING, DISINFECTING, AND SANITIZING ARE THE KEYS TO HEALTHY BUILDINGS. THERE IS SOME CONFUSION AMONG THE THREE TERMS, BUT IT'S IMPORTANT TO FOCUS ON CLEANING AND DISINFECTING UNLESS YOUR FACILITY OR LOCAL, STATE, OR FEDERAL LAW REQUIRES SANITIZATION.

Cleaning

Cleaning is defined as using water and soap or detergent to reduce germs on surfaces and remove dirt, dust, and crumbs. Cleaning once a day helps maintain a healthy facility, according to the CDC. However, high-touch surfaces, in high-traffic areas, should be cleaned more frequently. Employees should wash hands before and after cleaning, or use hand sanitizer.

Disinfecting

Disinfecting is the use of chemicals, or disinfectants, to kill germs on objects, which is more effective than cleaning that just reduces germs. Disinfecting is encouraged for high-traffic areas, areas with poor ventilation, no access to handwashing or hand sanitizer, and areas occupied by people over the age of 65 and those with serious medical conditions.

Sanitizing

Sanitize surfaces to further reduce the number of germs to a safe level. The safe level depends on the public health standards or requirements of the facility, such as restaurants, medical facilities, and daycare centers. Most will not need to worry about sanitization unless they work in a field or a facility that specifically requires it.

Combining Methods

The CDC recommends cleaning and disinfecting facilities where a sick individual has visited in the past 24 hours. After a sick person has left an area for 24 hours, only cleaning is needed, except for in high-traffic areas, areas with poor ventilation, areas with no hand washing or hand sanitizing options, and areas visited by those most vulnerable.

Alternate Methods

Alternative surface disinfection methods, like ultrasonic waves, high-intensity ultraviolet (UV) radiation, and light-emitting diode (LED) blue light, are other options to adequately clean surfaces. Fogging, fumigation, and wide-area or electrostatic spraying have several safety risks and should not be used as primary methods of surface disinfection.
