examines in detail the sculptor's encounters with Cubists Futurists Surrealists Dadaists the Russian avant garde and the circle of experimental poets whose influence on Lipchitz has hitherto been unappreciated With discerning scholarship he reveals Lipchitz not only as a prime exponent of modernism but as an artist whose baroque sensibilities link him with the older traditions of Western European art His close personal friendship with the artist has enabled him to write with deep understanding of the creative procedures of this master of modern sculpture A biographical outline a list of major exhibitions and a bibliography complement the text The broad selection of illustrations includes not only all of Lipchitz's major sculptures but also a group of representative drawings and paintings documentary photographs and a number of Cubist sculptures by other artists
