Serving Away From Home How Deployments Influence Reenlistment:

Serving Away from Home How Deployments Influence Reenlistment, 2002 Our research considered whether deployment affects the reenlistment of enlisted members and why A fundamental underlying question was why past deployment should exert any influence on current reenlistment behavior We suggest that a relationship exists because deployment enables members to learn about their preferences for deployment and about the frequency and duration of deployment We hypothesized that members enter military service with naive expectations about how much they will like deployment the frequency and duration of deployment and the variance of frequency and duration These expectations are revised following an actual deployment experience We described this learning mechanism as a Bayesian updating process Although each deployment has its own characteristics we hypothesized that learning occurs because deployments have common aspects such as the separation from family and friends the opportunity to apply training on missions risks the opportunity to demonstrate proficiency resolve and courage as well as the possible sense of personal fulfillment If deployment proves to be more satisfying than expected the member revises upward his or her expected utility of remaining in service

A Policy Analysis of Reserve Retirement Reform Beth J. Asch,James R. Hosek,Michael G. Mattock,2013 As the burden of defense borne by reserve forces has increased more attention has been paid to differences between the compensation systems for the reserve and active components One particular emphasis is on the retirement systems a key difference being that reserve members who complete 20 years must wait until age 60 to draw benefits whereas active members can draw benefits immediately upon discharge This monograph compares the reserve and active retirement systems discusses the importance of structuring compensation to enable flexibility in managing active and reserve manpower describes how the debate over reserve retirement reform has differed from active component retirement reform debate and considers obstacles to reform and how they might be overcome It also provides a quantitative assessment of several past congressional proposals to change the reserve retirement system in terms of their effects on reserve participation and personnel costs concluding that proposals to reduce the age at which eligible members may begin receiving retirement benefits are not cost effective means of sustaining or increasing reserve component retention It also concludes that a menu of member options can be a powerful tool to maintain morale and overcome obstacles to reform Current members could be given the choice of staying in the current retirement system or joining the new one and the choice might be offered over a period of time say five years New entrants and reenrants with few years of service might be placed under the new system

Rostker,K. C. Record ,2003 Military Compensation in the Age of Two-income Households Casey Wardynski,2000 When Regular Military Compensation was developed in the early 1960s military household income was synonymous with military pay Today a majority of soldiers spouses are in the labor force Due to the vagaries of military assignment and stationing practices these spouses incur a substantial employment and earnings penalty Heretofore this penalty was attributed to the relatively high rates of migration exhibited by military households Analysis of Current Population Survey data and the 1992 DoD Survey of Officers Enlisted Personnel and their Spouses demonstrate that the spouses of soldiers and airmen incur the heaviest burden of this earnings penalty due to service specific factors These findings have important implications for stationing practices civil service employment policies and military compensation policy Specifically these findings indicate that civilian spouse earnings can serve as a potential channel through which policy can act to enhance military household earnings by improving the employment and wage prospects of soldiers spouses without adverse budgetary consequences In this way military compensation policy can reflect labor market conditions that are likely to prevail into the new millennium rather than those extant at the midpoint of the last century Rand abstracts Nominations Before the Senate Armed Services Committee, First Session, 110th Congress United States.
