Course Description

This course aims at reviewing the basic accounting procedures and it has three phases. The first phase includes the rationale of financial accounting and the economic foundations of accounting generally. Elements of the history of accounting; interpretations of financial statements, and statements of the sources and application of funds and the valuation of stock and work-in-progress.

The second phase includes the development of Accounting Theory: Fundamental Accounting postulate: the accounting concepts in the light of today's market conditions. Accounting conventions: the objectives of accounting, generally accepted accounting principles (GAAP), controversial accounting concepts; etc. Topics also include approaches to the formulation of theory in accounting, nature of the objectives of financial accounting, history and development of accounting.

The third phase of the course introduces students to contemporary proposals for expounding the scope of corporate reports (human resource accounting, segment reporting, corporate social reporting and price-level changes).

Course Objectives

This course is aim at introducing students to elements of the history of accounting and accounting theory. It will provide explanation to what a theory is, the types and classes of accounting theory, the methodologies in development of accounting theory and the influence of accounting theory on
