

ADOLESCENT SEXUALITY AND REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH NEEDS

INTRODUCTION

More than a quarter of the world's population is between the ages of 10 and 24, with 86% living in less developed countries. These young people are tomorrow's parents. The reproductive and sexual health decisions they make today will affect the health and wellbeing of their communities and of their countries for decades to come.

- ▶ In particular, two issues have a profound impact on young people's sexual health and reproductive lives: family planning and HIV/AIDS. Teenage girls are more likely to die from pregnancy-related health complications than older women in their 20s. Statistics indicate that one-half of all new HIV infections worldwide occur among young people aged 15 to 24 years.
- ▶ Changes during adolescence, importance of dealing with adolescents' reproductive health problems. Factors affecting adolescents' risk-taking behaviours and its consequences. Importance of raising awareness about adolescent reproductive health rights.

Sexuality And Reproductive Health During Adolescence In Africa With Special Reference To Cameroon:

Sexuality and Reproductive Health During Adolescence in Africa Barthélémy Kuate Defo, 1998 African Journal of Reproductive Health, 2005 The Changing Transitions to Adulthood in Developing Countries National Research Council, Division of Behavioral and Social Sciences and Education, Committee on Population, Panel on Transitions to Adulthood in Developing Countries, 2006-01-08 Serving as a companion to Growing Up Global this book from the National Research Council explores how the transition to adulthood is changing in developing countries in light of globalization and what the implications of these changes might be for those responsible for designing youth policies and programs Presenting a detailed series of studies this volume both complements its precursor and makes for a useful contribution in its own right It should be of significant interest to scholars leaders of civil society and those charged with designing youth policies and programs

The Continuing Epidemiological Transition in Sub-Saharan Africa National Research Council, Division of Behavioral and Social Sciences and Education, Committee on Population, 2012-10-01 Among the poorest and least developed regions in the world sub Saharan Africa has long faced a heavy burden of disease with malaria tuberculosis and more recently HIV being among the most prominent contributors to that burden Yet in most parts of Africa and especially in those areas with the greatest health care needs the data available to health planners to better understand and address these problems are extremely limited The vast majority of Africans are born and will die without being recorded in any document or appearing in official statistics With few exceptions African countries have no civil registration systems in place and hence are unable to continuously generate vital statistics or to provide systematic information on patterns of cause of death relying instead on periodic household level surveys or intense and continuous monitoring of small demographic surveillance sites to provide a partial epidemiological and demographic profile of the population In 1991 the Committee on Population of the National Academy of Sciences organized a workshop on the epidemiological transition in developing countries The workshop brought together medical experts epidemiologists demographers and other social scientists involved in research on the epidemiological transition in developing countries to discuss the nature of the ongoing transition identify the most important contributors to the overall burden of disease and discuss how such information could be used to assist policy makers in those countries to establish priorities with respect to the prevention and management of the main causes of ill health This report summarizes the presentations and discussions from a workshop convened in October 2011 that featured invited speakers on the topic of epidemiological transition in sub Saharan Africa The workshop was organized by a National Research Council panel of experts in various aspects of the study of epidemiological transition and of sub Saharan data sources The Continuing Epidemiological Transition in Sub Saharan Africa serves as a factual summary of what occurred at the workshop in October 2011 Growing Up Global Institute of Medicine, National Research Council, Division of Behavioral and Social Sciences and Education, Board on Children, Youth, and Families, Committee on Population, Panel on Transitions to Adulthood in Developing Countries,2005-06-25 The challenges for young people making the transition to adulthood are greater today than ever before Globalization with its power to reach across national boundaries and into the smallest communities carries with it the transformative power of new markets and new technology At the same time globalization brings with it new ideas and lifestyles that can conflict with traditional norms and values And while the economic benefits are potentially enormous the actual course of globalization has not been without its critics who charge that to date the gains have been very unevenly distributed generating a new set of problems associated with rising inequality and social polarization Regardless of how the globalization debate is resolved it is clear that as broad global forces transform the world in which the next generation will live and work the choices that today s young people make or others make on their behalf will facilitate or constrain their success as adults Traditional expectations regarding future employment prospects and life experiences are no longer valid Growing Up Global examines how the transition to adulthood is changing in developing countries and what the implications of these changes might be for those responsible for designing youth policies and programs in particular those affecting adolescent reproductive health The report sets forth a framework that identifies criteria for successful transitions in the context of contemporary global changes for five key adult roles adult worker citizen and community participant spouse parent and household manager
