Precalculus Making Connections:

Precalculus Lawrence P. Runyan, Larry Runyan, Holly Runyan, 1998-09 This text is supported by an amazing internet Website allowing for additional flexibility in the teaching of the course While many texts sacrifice repetition and skill building to stress modeling this text combines relevant applications with a substantial selection of skill building problems Can be used in a traditional classroom a wired classroom or even in distance learning courses Developed over 14 years with the combined knowledge from programmers students and instructors Making the Connection Marilyn Paula Carlson, Chris Rasmussen, 2008 The chapters in this volume convey insights from mathematics education research that have direct implications for anyone interested in improving teaching and learning in undergraduate mathematics This synthesis of research on learning and teaching mathematics provides relevant information for any math department or individual faculty member who is working to improve introductory proof courses the longitudinal coherence of precalculus through differential equations students mathematical thinking and problem solving abilities and students understanding of fundamental ideas such as variable and rate of change Other chapters include information about programs that have been successful in supporting students continued study of mathematics The authors provide many examples and ideas to help the reader infuse the knowledge from mathematics education research into mathematics teaching practice University mathematicians and community college faculty spend much of their time engaged in work to improve their teaching Frequently they are left to their own experiences and informal conversations with colleagues to develop new approaches to support student learning and their continuation in mathematics Over the past 30 years research in undergraduate mathematics education has produced knowledge about the development of mathematical understandings and models for supporting students mathematical learning Currently very little of this knowledge is affecting teaching practice We hope that this volume will open a meaningful dialogue between researchers and practitioners toward the goal of realizing improvements in undergraduate mathematics curriculum and instruction

Discipline-Centered Learning Communities: Creating Connections Among Students, Faculty, and Curricula Kimberly Buch, Kenneth E. Barron, 2012-12-10 Take an in depth look at discipline centered learning communities Using psychology as an example this issue provides prescriptive advice for those interested in developing a learning community in any academic discipline or program Learning communities are a powerful vehicle for creating and sustaining connections among students faculty and the curriculum but creating one can be a challenge By providing resources practical case studies and theoretical grounding this volume can both inspire and guide faculty staff and administrators in meeting their pedagogical and curricular goals Learn how the five types of learning communities based curricularly residentially in the classroom on the students themselves and even virtually can be used to enhance student engagement and learning Illustrating the versatility of the practice across a wide range of settings student populations and institutional types this issue also contains an extensive listing of resources that go beyond disciplinary
