

A CONFRONTATION TECHNIQUE USED IN PSYCHOTHERAPY

H. H. GARNER, M.D.*

Chicago, Ill.

Modifications of orthodox psychoanalysis, and of psychoanalytically oriented psychotherapy, have attempted to reduce the shortcomings of a technique which restricts therapy to a group of patients with certain limiting specifications. These in fact constitute a very small segment of the total number of patients needing and wanting care. It becomes imperative, therefore, that the group of individuals who are treated be increased. It is true that the number and types of patients considered capable of benefitting from psychotherapy has been gradually increasing as basic psychoanalytic, and other psychotherapeutic methods have been modified and developed. But the protagonists of such alterations in technique should be able to demonstrate that the therapeutic course and effects of such usage can be understood in terms of an internally consistent theoretical system. Therapeutic results, in order to be scientifically acceptable as a method of treatment, must be understandable on more than trial and error, or empirical grounds.

For example, the range of possible procedures in the treatment of a neurosis conceived theoretically as systematic reaction to unsuccessful repression would be: (1) strengthening of the defenses, (2) increasing repression, (3) supporting the ego, and (5) widening the ego span. The strengthening of defenses may impoverish the individual's adaptive capacity and decrease the possibility of his obtaining satisfactions. When desires are frustrated under repression, the result may be greater conflict. The possibility of controlling drive by diminishing biologic intensity for expression has a limited potential and would probably not be too rewarding for the individual. Treatment of choice by the psychoanalytically oriented therapist is to produce a permanent re-adjustment in the relationship of the ego to the other areas of the total personality. These re-adjustments are such that the individual is enabled to integrate within himself, and to direct into more acceptable channels drives which had previously required unsuccessful defensive measures; in other words, the individual can broaden his ego span.

Historical Foundations of Educational Psychology John A. Glover, Royce R. Ronning, 2013-11-11 This volume represents a beginning effort to compile a history of educational psychology The project began innocuously enough several years ago when we decided to add mon material about the history of educational psychology to the undergraduate course we were teaching What seemed like a simple task became very complex as we searched in vain for a volume dealing with the topic We ended up drawing on various histories of psychology that devoted anywhere from a few paragraphs to several pages to the topic and on a very few articles addressing the issue We were startled frankly by the apparent lack of interest in the history of our field and decided to attempt to compile a history ourselves As is the case with any edited volume the contributing authors deserve credit for its positive features They uniformly made every effort asked of them and taught us much about educational psychology Any errors or omissions are our responsibility alone Problem Solving Strategies and Interventions for Men in Conflict Dwight Moore, Fred Leafgren, 1990 This collection of readings addresses special issues with which men must deal in modern society It was written for counselors at all educational levels social workers community therapists private practitioners clinicians teachers hospital workers and Employee Assistance Program workers The book is divided into five sections that deal with 1 personal growth and societal expectations 2 sexuality family and marriage 3 multicultural concerns 4 techniques and treatments and 5 ideas for the future References for each chapter and a bibliography compiled by the American Association for Counseling and Development s Committee on Men are included The bibliography contains citations in the areas of general readings periodicals black men burnout and stress career change changing roles of men counseling and sex roles counselor client relationships developmental issues and aging disabled clients divorce divorce and parenting dual careers expressing feelings fathers and parenting gender differences in counseling grieving homosexuality intimacy and friendship leisure loneliness love and sexuality male clients men s groups mentoring younger men moral responsibilities mother son relationships nontraditional career choice physical health power relationships retirement self nurturance stereotypes substance abuse success touch between client and therapist and working NB
