

Price-Cap Regulation

Price-cap regulation is now common for electricity and phone service. The regulators set an initial price, which then rises at the inflation rate minus an “X-factor”. The X-factor is intended to reflect the fact that costs of providing utilities rises less than the general inflation rate. Thus, if the X-factor is 3% and inflation is 4%, the utility could increase its price by 1% that year ($= 4 - 3$). If inflation is 2% the next year, then that year the utility must reduce its price by 1% ($= 2 - 3$).

It's really just rate of return regulation with pre-set review timing.
