Treatment for Posttraumatic Stress Disorder in Military and Veteran Populations Institute of Medicine, Board on the Health of Select Populations, Committee on the Assessment of Ongoing Efforts in the Treatment of Posttraumatic Stress Disorder, 2012-07-22 Prior to the military conflicts in Iraq and Afghanistan wars and conflicts have been characterized by such injuries as infectious diseases and catastrophic gunshot wounds. However, the signature injuries sustained by United States military personnel in these most recent conflicts are blast wounds and the psychiatric consequences to combat, particularly posttraumatic stress disorder (PTSD), which affects an estimated 13 to 20 percent of U.S. service members who have fought in Iraq or Afghanistan since 2001. PTSD is triggered by a specific traumatic event including combat, which leads to symptoms such as persistent re-experiencing of the event, emotional numbing or avoidance of thoughts, feelings, conversations or places associated with the trauma, and hyperarousal such as exaggerated startle responses or difficulty concentrating. As the U.S. reduces its military involvement in the Middle East, the Departments of Defense (DoD) and Veterans Affairs (VA) anticipate that increasing numbers of returning veterans will need PTSD services. As a result, Congress asked the DoD in consultation with the VA to sponsor an IOM study to assess both departments' PTSD treatment programs and services. Treatment for Posttraumatic Stress Disorder in Military and Veteran Populations Initial Assessment is the first of two mandated reports. It examines some of the available programs to prevent, diagnose, treat, and rehabilitate those who have PTSD and encourages further research that can help to improve PTSD care.

Handbook of Integrative Clinical Psychology, Psychiatry, and Behavioral Medicine Roland A. Carlstedt, 2009-12-14 This is the long-awaited text on interdisciplinary treatment and assessment of, among other clinical topics, brain-derived behavioral, cognitive, and neurological disorders. An Examination of the Relationships Among Posttraumatic Stress Disorder Symptoms, Anger, Physical Health, and Medical Utilization Charlene Laffaye,2006

Posttraumatic stress disorder PTSD and trauma related symptoms have been shown to be associated with physical problems and increased medical utilization In addition anger has been found to play an important role in PTSD and has also been linked independent of PTSD diagnosis to physical health problems Specifically both anger expression and anger suppression have been found to be positively associated with physical health problems Despite a large literature addressing various aspects of PTSD anger health problems and medical utilization a clear understanding of the interplay of these variables remains elusive This cross sectional study attempted to clarify these relationships by examining 1 whether anger expression and anger suppression mediate the relationship between PTSD symptoms and physical health problems and 2 whether PTSD symptoms are directly associated with medical utilization One hundred and ninety nine primary care patients from an outpatient clinic in the VA San Diego Healthcare System participated in the study Participants were recruited during a primary care visit Before their appointment they completed a questionnaire battery which included demographic questions measures of PTSD anger physical health and medical utilization In addition to these self report measures physical health and medical utilization information was extracted from the participants medical charts It was hypothesized that 1 anger expression and anger suppression would mediate the relationship between PTSD symptoms and physical health problems and 2 PTSD symptoms would exert a direct influence on medical utilization Structural equation modeling SEM was used to examine the study hypotheses Results indicated that higher levels of PTSD symptoms and anger suppression scores were associated with a greater number of physical problems However the hypothesized mediating effects of anger expression and anger suppression on the relationship between PTSD symptoms and physical health problems were not supported by these analyses In addition PTSD symptoms were positively correlated with medical utilization However rather than finding a direct association between PTSD symptoms and medical utilization physical symptoms accounted for this relationship These cross sectional associations are suggestive of a possible effect of PTSD on physical health Implications and future directions are discussed
