Conference, 1995 Consists of papers presented at the Engineering Foundation Conference held in 1994 The objective was to summarize the state of stormwater monitoring with respect to meeting these regulatory requirements Technical sessions included an overview of stormwater monitoring needs locating illicit connections and system runoff characterization Highway Runoff in Areas of Karst Topography Bridget M. Donaldson, 2004 Karst terrain is characterized by sinkholes depressions caves and underground drainage generally underlain by soluble rocks such as limestone and dolomite Because natural filtration through soil is limited in karst areas pollutants in highway stormwater runoff can directly infiltrate underground sources of drinking water and environments that are habitats for sensitive species Although the Virginia Department of Transportation VDOT has implemented guidelines for construction projects in karst areas to ameliorate this problem there has been considerable activity at the state level in recent years concerning the protection of karst groundwater New regulations or requirements regarding karst area runoff could add significantly to VDOT s construction and maintenance activities This report summarizes the research and regulations to position VDOT to manage karst topography issues appropriately Although more studies of karst groundwater contamination are needed the literature does not currently support the need for more stringent regulatory controls than are already in place
