Abstract: The Global City is a new paradigm in the development of cities in the globalization era. World cities are world cities that lead to the circulation of capital and information, and are only focused on cities in the northern regions of the world, so that the nature of urban development is more focused on macroeconomic expansion which is space to encourage everyone to make transactions in the open market. This global city offers a space for economic reflection, that the economy itself does not occur only in one region but covers the world region, where there is no subordinate relationship between first world cities and third world cities because it offers the interdependence of urban development, as already mentioned and proposed in the concept of the global city. Mumbai's growth into a Mega City is due to the booming population density which makes the area more crowded and looks slum by tourists. Mumbai itself, as the heart of India's economy, must improve to make it look clean and tidy. The traffic jams that occur can make city life stop. One of the cities in India which is considered as the largest slum area in Southeast Asia because of the weak electricity and limited water network. Cities that actually function in the national economy as collectors and redistribution of economic cycles, now have to face other cities around the world to compete with each other to achieve a massive economy for the economic development of the city. The implication that arises then is that cities no longer have to be oriented to the local or national world, but also to be oriented to the global.

Keywords: Global City, World Cities, Urban Development, Redistribution of Economic Cycles

1. Introduction

Mumbai is one of the cities located on the west coast of India. This huge city has become an economic powerhouse in India itself. The population in this city of Mumbai is very booming with a population density of three million people in 1951, skyrocketing to twenty million people in 2021 and continues to increase from year to year.

Hundreds of high-rise buildings were built and most of them were built luxury apartments which were intended for the rich. However, space for this new building meant tearing down hundreds of acres of Mumbai slums. Mumbai is a city which is hungry for success and struggling for survival. For many people, life in Mumbai is the realization of the Indian city dream.

Mumbai is India's financial and economic center, more than 20 million people live here. Traffic jams that sometimes break down for kilometers make life in this city stop. Thousands of people commute by train daily with the city's rail system with only four lines operating. At rush hour, the station gets very crowded. Sometimes, with so many people traveling every day and being dominated by men, the train platforms look crowded and even exceed the capacity they should be filled with. Despite the crowds, they enjoy traveling on the train despite the crowded atmosphere.

Dharavi is a slum in the heart of Mumbai with over one million people living and living here and is considered the largest slum in Southeast Asia. Electricity is weak and water is only available for two hours a day and there is no sewage system which makes the city look slum. Poverty is everywhere, but local Dharavi residents have adapted by developing their own infrastructure. The local people of Dharavi have their own jobs which allow them to live side by side with the existing slums.
