Recruitment & Retention Resources, 1998 Application Videos in the Recruiting Process Julia Wilnhammer, 2019-07-16
Seminar paper from the year 2018 in the subject Leadership and Human Resources Recruiting grade 1.0 Technical University of Munich Chair of Corporate Management language English abstract New forms of applications are emerging with the introduction of image based communication in the application process The trend of application videos has the potential to reduce costs and risks for organizations among other considerable opportunities but this application type has not been popularly implemented by organizations in their recruiting processes yet However there is practically no scientific research on the use of these videos and whether and to what degree applicants accept this application trend For this term paper applicants aversion to application videos and potentially related constructs are empirically examined via an online survey with a sample of students from all over Germany Results show relatively high aversion to application videos among the participants but there are differences depending on the students fields of study Correlation analysis reveals a weak negative correlation between video technology acceptance and aversion to application videos Furthermore aversion to application videos is positively correlated with participants risk aversion whereas no significant correlation with job application experience was found This term paper emphasizes that applicants aversion to application videos is substantial and should therefore be carefully considered in the adoption of this trend It represents continuation of research on e selection solutions and builds a sound starting point for future research on application videos Teacher Recruitment and Retention Antoine M. Garibaldi, 1989 New Lenses on Intellectual Disabilities Jennifer Clegg, 2020-05-21 This book gathers together recent international research in intellectual disability ID examining the diverse modes of existence that characterise living with intellectual disabilities in the 21st century Ranging from people with no speech and little mobility who need 24 hour care to people who marry or hold down jobs this book moves beyond the typical person with ID imagined by public policy healthy with mild ID and a supportive family and living in a welcoming community The book is divided into three sections The first A richer picture of people and relationships expands our understanding of different people and lifestyles associated with ID The second section Where current policies fall short finds that Supported Living provides just as mediocre a form of care as group homes and concludes that services for people with challenging behaviour are unrelated to need The contributors research identifies no effective employment support strategies as well as technological and legal changes that prevent organisations from employing people with ID With nearly a quarter of this population in poor health the contributors reflect on whether social model approaches should be allowed to trump medical considerations The third section New thinking about well being reveals that being old poor and living alone increases health risk and that medication administration is significantly more complex for people with ID Moving beyond 20th century certainties surrounding intellectual disability this book will be of interest to those studying contemporary issues facing those living with ID as well as those studying public health policy more widely The chapters in this book were originally published in issues of the Journal of Intellectual Developmental Disability Staff Recruitment, Retention, & Training Strategies for Community Human Services Organizations Sheryl Ann Larson, Amy S.
