PENTECOSTAL EXORCISM: WITCHCRAFT AND DEMONOLOGY IN GHANA

By Opoku Ogyirah

Reviewed by Robin Scott

Leiden, Netherlands: Brill

It is possible that if you surveyed people from all over the world Christianity would be considered a universal religion, with a Western personality. And no matter where you are in the world it is likely that if you were to make a reference to Christianity you might automatically include a reference to the American church. It is hard for people to separate the West from Christianity. Yet, the World Economic Forum tells us that more Christians live in Africa than in any other continent in the world (Kazem 2019). Additionally, The Pew Research Center concludes “By 2060 six of the countries with the top ten largest Christian populations will be in Africa” (McGendon 2017). The world’s eyes have stared far too long at Western Christianity. Opoku Ogyirah commands our attention to Ghana and African Christianity in his writing Pentecostal Exorcism: Witchcraft and Demonology in Ghana.

The purpose of Ogyirah’s work is to evaluate the function of exorcism, as it relates to witchcraft, within the Church of Pentecost (CoP) in Ghana. His study includes the origins and understanding of witchcraft within the context of African cosmology, along with the interworking of Christianity and traditional African religion in Ghana. The problems he sought to investigate was “why witchcraft and exorcism continue to persist among the Akan people of Ghana in Christianity” (3). The method Ogyirah decided to use was the breaking down of the “theological framework for the exorcistic ministry, using the CoP as a case study” (3).

In the first half of Ogyirah’s work he lays the foundation with a comprehensive explanation of African cosmology and terminology. One of the things immediately noticeable in his writing is his position on how important the need for contextualization is within the framework of Christian evangelism. He writes “a good way of making the biblical message meaningful to a contemporary culture is to decontextualize the message to arrive at the supracultural element and then express it in the terms and contexts which are meaningful in the local culture” (11). You will find in the latter part of the first half of the text it is not by accident that he expresses this position in the introduction. As he covers the development of Christianity in Ghana he clearly expresses his concerns with the manner in which missionaries delivered the gospel and Christian theology to the Akan people. There is a level of responsibility that he holds the missionaries to for the “contaminated” (88) version of Christianity that is expressed among the Akan people, or as he calls it “the appropriation of Christianity by the Akan” (88). However, he doesn’t release the Akan people from their part played in this contamination. The first half of the book is closed out with a well defined theory of how Pentecostal exorcism came to be in Ghana:

Ghanaians themselves had come to the realization that everything traditional was pagan. This sort of realization influenced the Akan society as a whole; and finally Christianity became associated with the white man’s religion, everything it contained was godly. Akan culture (and religion) was associated with the black man’s religion, everything it contained was devilish. The Pentecostal type of exorcism arises from this understanding. (107)
