

Radical Empiricism

Protagoras and Aristotle were epistemological monists, opposing the division between knower and known that was the trademark of the dualists, the Pythagoras/Plato position. As we have seen, virtually all subsequent thinkers followed Pythagoras and Plato and the belief in a "mind" with faculties that operates the "machine of the body" is still the establishment viewpoint.

Radical empiricism is similar to the monism of Protagoras and Aristotle and the empiricism of David Hume. Reality is our personal experience and that comes from our senses. The sum of empirical experience is the self – there is nothing more – and if there is, we can never know it.

Religious Pluralism and the Nigerian State Simeon O. Ilesanmi, 1997 In the case of Nigeria scholarship on religious politics has not adequately taken into account the pluralistic context and the idealistic pretensions of the state that inhibit the possibility of forging an enduring civic amity among Nigeria's diverse groups Ilesanmi proposes a new philosophy or model of religio political interaction which he calls dialogic politics Dialogic politics celebrates pluralism and suggests that religious institutions be construed as mediating structures functioning as buffers between individual citizens in search of existential meaning and cultural identity and the impersonal state which tends to gravitate toward instrumental objectives Ilesanmi's study offers a fresh perspective on the complex relations between political attitudes and religious convictions Religious
