ABSTRACT

Information became a basic and fundamental commodity for everyone treated as sixth resources amongst other resources like man, money, material, machine time and common to all so called as "information commons". Though in the present high- tech environment, it is apparent that the professionals' quest for information is found towards use of traditional sources of information counterpart with electronic sources of information. Again both of these sources have certain advantages and disadvantages. The present paper compares the use and applications of traditional and electronic sources of information by the academics. The result explores that majority of teachers prefer electronic sources of information for their academic and research endeavours, interestingly noticeable that high preference is observed towards use of print journals than e-journals.
