Organizational Context to Sell Environmental Sustainability as a Strategic Issue to Top Management? Maxime Dessy, 2010-03-10 Diploma Thesis from the year 2009 in the subject Business economics Business Management Corporate Governance grade 16 20 Solvay Brussels School of Economics and Management course Economics Psychology CSR language English abstract This master thesis is divided into three major parts The first part of my thesis offers the theoretical background on which is based the empirical research I have conducted as part of this thesis Therefore this section consists for a major fraction in a review of Dutton and her colleagues work The section begins with an overview of the literature on issue selling to top management followed by a review of the cognitive categorization theory Using these two major theoretical sources as well as other relevant findings from the academic literature I then suggest a general model linking organizational context top management s interpretation and emotional response to environmental sustainability issues and the subsequent organizational response to those issues The theoretical background and my individual extension to the existing literature will be the basis for the second part of my work The second part of my thesis consists in an empirical research based mostly on Dutton and her colleagues framework that I have extended to the specific issue of environmental sustainability The goal of this research was to identify the elements of the organizational context playing an important role in the prediction of top management s interpretation of environmental sustainability issues The research involved two consecutive studies The first study Study 1 consisted in few semi structured and repertory grids interviews to distinguish what elements from the organizational context might help to foresee how top management would interpret an environmental sustainability issue Hypotheses on how the organizational context could help to predict top management s categorization outcome were then designed according to the results The second study Study 2 consisted in a short online questionnaire sent to a large poll of top managers in order to verify the hypotheses elicited by study 1 on how and which contextual elements predict top management s interpretation of green issues The third part of my thesis represents a general conclusion on my final year thesis It includes my research question a general overview of the different theories I used to answer it the different findings and the limitations of my empirical research

Trends Towards Sustainability in the Nuclear Fuel Cycle OECD Nuclear Energy Agency,2011 Interest in expanding nuclear power to cope with rising demand for energy and potential climate change places increased attention on the nuclear fuel cycle and whether significant moves are being taken towards ensuring sustainability over the long term Future nuclear power programme decisions will be increasingly based on strategic considerations involving the complete nuclear fuel cycle as illustrated by the international joint projects for Generation IV reactors Currently 90% of installed reactors worldwide operate on a once through nuclear fuel cycle using uranium oxide fuel While closing the fuel cycle has been a general aim for several decades progress towards that goal has been slow This report reviews developments in the fuel cycle over the past ten years potential developments over the next decade and the outlook for the longer term It analyses technological developments and government actions both nationally and internationally related to the fuel cycle and examines these within a set of sustainability parameters in order to identify trends and to make recommendations for further action
