A Semantic Analysis of Yup'ik Spatial Deixis Alison Smiley Rukeyser, 2005 Incremental Static Semantic Analysis William Harry Maddox, 1997 Abstract Language based programming environments provide some or all of the functionality of a compiler an interactive debugger a browser and a configuration manager behind a unified user interface based on an editing paradigm As the user edits a program the changes are processed incrementally allowing for low latency updates to derived information

This information can be made available to interactive environment services such as browsing navigation and real time error reporting In this dissertation we address an important subproblem in the construction of such environments the generation of static semantic analyzers that operate in an incremental mode Our work is embodied in the Colander II system which introduces both a new metalanguage for the declarative specification of static semantic analyses and new techniques for generating an incremental analyzer from these specifications automatically Our specification metalanguage melds the advantages of traditional attribute grammars including amenability to extensive generation time analysis with the expressiveness and client independence characteristic of Ballance s Logical Constraint Grammars In comparison to traditional attribute grammars our metalanguage allows much more of the incrementality inherent in a particular analysis task to be exposed within the formalism itself where it can be exploited automatically by our implementation Our incremental analysis algorithms exploit the attributed objects and function valued attributes provided by our metalanguage mapping these expressive notations onto a fine grained incremental implementation We are thus able to automatically generate incremental analyzers that handle long distance dependencies and aggregate attributes efficiently Our methods allow unusual freedom to control the granularity of incremental evaluation allowing performance tradeoffs to be chosen as demanded by the needs of the application rather than as dictated by the a priori requirements of the algorithms We have also developed a static analysis and transformation on attribute grammars that accomodates a useful class of circular attribute dependencies automating the backpatching method used in hand coded compilers The transformation is employed in Colander II but is applicable to attribute grammars in general We have used the Colander II system to create a static semantic analyzer for the programming language Modula 2 which has revealed both strengths and weakness in our specification paradigm Interestingly the most significant difficulty that we encountered applies equally to traditional attribute grammars but has not been widely appreciated in the attribute grammar literature Our work was performed in the context of the Ensemble project at UC Berkeley which is constructing a prototype integrated multilingual language based software development environment based on the editing of structured multimedia documents

Referential-Semantic Analysis Torben Thrane,2009-03-19 Dr Thrane makes an original contribution to one of the central topics in syntax and semantics the nature and mechanisms of reference in natural language He makes a fundamental distinction between syntactic analyses that are internal to the structure of a language and analyses of the referential properties that connect a language with the outside world and therefore derive in some sense from common human capacities for perceptual discrimination Dr Thrane argues that the failure to make this distinction and to attend separately to both kinds of analysis has vitiated previous general accounts of linguistic structure The book focuses particularly on pronouns and on the role of determiners quantifiers and other components of the noun phrase Most of the data come from the modern Germanic languages especially English but Dr Thrane considers also the structural peculiarities of classifier languages like Vietnamese The book will be important for students of English language as well as for general linguists

Semantic Sentiment Analysis in Social Streams Hassan Saif,2017-06-15 Microblogs and social media platforms are now considered among the most popular forms of online communication Through a platform like

Twitter much information reflecting people's opinions and attitudes is published and shared among users on a daily basis. This has recently brought great opportunities to companies interested in tracking and monitoring the reputation of their brands and businesses and to policy makers and politicians to support their assessment of public opinions about their policies or political issues. A wide range of approaches to sentiment analysis on social media have been recently built. Most of these approaches rely mainly on the presence of affect words or syntactic structures that explicitly and unambiguously reflect sentiment. However, these approaches are semantically weak, that is, they do not account for the semantics of words when detecting their sentiment in text. In order to address this problem, the author investigates the role of word semantics in sentiment analysis of microblogs. Specifically, Twitter is used as a case study of microblogging platforms to investigate whether capturing the sentiment of words with respect to their semantics leads to more accurate sentiment analysis models on Twitter. To this end, the author proposes several approaches in this book for extracting and incorporating two types of word semantics for sentiment analysis: contextual semantics, i.e., semantics captured from words' co-occurrences, and conceptual semantics, i.e., semantics extracted from external knowledge sources. Experiments are conducted with both types of semantics by assessing their impact in three popular sentiment analysis tasks on Twitter: entity-level sentiment analysis, tweet-level sentiment analysis, and context-sensitive sentiment lexicon adaptation. The findings from this body of work demonstrate the value of using semantics in sentiment analysis on Twitter. The proposed approaches, which consider word semantics for sentiment analysis at both entity and tweet levels, surpass non-semantic approaches in most evaluation scenarios. This book will be of interest to students, researchers, and practitioners in the semantic sentiment analysis field. The author, Hassan Saif, has won the Semantic Web Science Association (SWSA) Distinguished Dissertation Award for this publication.

Both passive and active inhabitants of the eukaryotic genome, they can influence its stable components and at the same time be subject to various types of cellular control. The book covers different aspects of their structure and expression, replication and transpositions, their interaction with the host cell, their role as important factors of genetic instability, and essential contributors to the structure and evolution of the Drosophila genome.
