son Jesse I Am Fighting for the Union Henry Willis Wells, 2023-04-25 On 18 May 1862 Henry Willis Wells wrote a letter to his mother telling her in clear terms I am fighting for the Union Since August 1861 when he joined the US Navy as a master's mate at age twenty he never wavered in his loyalty He wrote to his family frequently that he considered military service a necessary and patriotic duty and the career that ensued was a dramatic one astutely and articulately documented by Wells himself in over 200 letters home leaving an insightful detailed and invaluable account of daily life in the Union Navy Prior to the start of the war Wells's considerable merchant marine experience qualified him to join the service as a junior officer Thus he was a part of the naval hierarchy where he was able to witness some events consequences temperaments and relationships that senior officers above him and seamen below often could not His family who lived in Brookline Massachusetts served as his outlet to fully express his wartime observations and sentiments and his correspondence fully presents his personality and thoughts observations and experiences At fifteen years of age Henry signed on for a West Coast voyage on the clipper ship Ocean Telegraph on her first cruise During the trip Wells kept a journal In it as he would in his later letters home he revealed his enquiring character and a desire to learn the duties and business of the ship even navigation This journey matured an impressionable young man into a more worldly and cosmopolitan individual He later found employment on other merchant ships and in between voyages he also trained at the Boston Mercantile and Nautical College studying dead reckoning and navigation He joined the navy shortly after the war began initially aboard the Cambridge attached to the North Atlantic Blockading Squadron which patrolled the waters of the Chesapeake Bay He witnessed the Battle of Hampton Roads and the fight between the ironclads CSS Virginia and the USS Monitor They blockaded Wilmington North Carolina and chased the schooner J W Pindar ashore during her attempt to run the blockade when Henry's boarding party was captured by Confederate forces After a short prison stay in the infamous Libby Prison in Richmond his Confederate captors paroled Henry He travelled back to Brookline and soon thereafter the Navy Department assigned him to the gunboat Ceres which operated on the sounds and rivers of North Carolina protecting army positions ashore Henry was on board during the Confederate attempt to capture Washington North Carolina During this April 1863 attack Henry was instrumental in the town's defense commanding a naval battery ashore during the latter part of the fight His exceptional service gained him a transfer to a larger warship the USS Montgomery and later Gem of the Sea part of the East Gulf Blockading Squadron Through his hard work and professionalism he finally earned his first command In September 1864 he became the commanding officer of the Rosalie a sloop used as a tender to the local warships Later he commanded the schooner Annie also a tender At the end of December 1864 however the Annie suffered a massive explosion killing all hands including Wells He was twenty three years old when his life and career ended tragically Wells's letters document both his considerable achievements and his frustrations As a volunteer officer from the merchant service he had to pass an examination on seamanship navigation and gunnery But these volunteers proved to be critical to the navy even though regular officers often viewed the volunteers as less efficient unknowledgeable and unworthy of command Wells initially experienced this prejudice on each ship he served yet he overcame these preconceived notions due to his knowledge and experience as well as his outstanding work ethic command presence and his good nature Yet his service was often emotionally difficult for him Despite his years of experience and training the navy assigned him more junior positions than many other men with vastly less skills and proficiency In his correspondence he discusses shipmates with little or no time at sea and yet who were senior to him His correspondence is always candid He addressed most of his letters to his mother as well his two sisters in a manner straightforward and to the point regarding those he served with He frequently discusses news of the wider world as well as his opinions wants and wishes his messmates and fellow officers and his health homesickness the challenges of his vocation His letters are also replete with his efforts to improve himself In his spare time Henry studied French and read some of the classics of literature and history but he also tried to improve his professional knowledge by studying navigation and gunnery
