In this study the author seeks to develop Historical Realism as a new approach to International Relations Drawing on recent theoretical developments in International Relations and Historical Sociology it is argued first that a distinction between constitutive and causal theory is necessary and second that this distinction makes comparisons at a high level of abstraction across time and space possible The explanatory focus of Historical Realism is the political reproduction of states States are seen as constantly facing a double security dilemma it is being threatened or potentially threatened by two sets of rivals for revenue At the level of abstraction of Historical Realism states have two possible responses short of collapse to this double security dilemma They can either pursue a fortifying mode of political reproduction whereby the essence of their strategy is to prevent rivals from gaining strength Alternatively they can pursue an alliance building mode of political reproduction whereby they cooperate with or co opt rivals turning them into allies instead Which response states choose depend on the constitutive context they exist in and how this is changing The constitutive context is conceptualised with four dichotomous dimensions International systems it is argued can either be functionally differentiated or not and political relations in these systems can either be embedded in economic relations or not The societies from which states extract revenue can further either be competitive or not and either logistically closed or open The second part of the study develops this conceptual framework in the contexts of Japanese political reproduction towards the end of the nineteenth century the political reproduction and failure of the Roman Republic and political reproduction in early medieval western Europe
