Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome ,2004 Severe acute respiratory syndrome SARS is a viral respiratory illness that was recognized as a global threat in March 2003 after first appearing in Southern China in November 2002

SARS War Ping-Chung Leung,Eng Eong Ooi,2003 Describes the sudden advent symptoms and effects of SARS severe acute respiratory syndrome discusses possible treatments prevention social and economic results and related topics and answers common questions

Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome ,2004 Severe acute respiratory syndrome SARS came to global attention in February 2003 when officials in China informed the World Health Organization WHO about 305 cases of atypical pneumonia that had occurred in Guangdong Province By the time the new infectious disease was declared contained in July 2003 more than 8 000 cases and 780 deaths had been reported from 29 countries worldwide Since then active global surveillance for SARS associated coronavirus SARS CoV disease in humans has detected no laboratory confirmed person to person transmission of SARS CoV No one knows if when or where person to person transmission of SARS CoV will recur However the rapidity of spread of infection and the high levels of morbidity and mortality associated with SARS CoV call for careful monitoring for the recurrence of transmission and preparations for the rapid implementation of control measures The 2003 global outbreaks demonstrated the ease with which SARS CoV can seed and spread in human populations when cases remain undetected or when infected persons are not cared for in controlled environments that reduce the risk of transmission to others The two laboratory acquired infections and the recent cases in Southern China show that SARS CoV continues to be a threat Early detection of SARS cases and contacts plus swift and decisive implementation of containment measures are therefore essential to prevent transmission Although the United States had only a limited SARS CoV outbreak during the 2003 epidemic with only eight laboratory confirmed cases and no significant local spread the U S population is clearly vulnerable to the more widespread disruptive outbreaks experienced in other countries During this period of no known person to person transmission of SARS CoV in the world healthcare and public health officials must therefore do what they can to prepare for the possibility that SARS CoV transmission may recur This document provides guidance for surveillance clinical and laboratory evaluation and reporting in the setting of no known person to person transmission of SARS CoV worldwide Recommendations are derived from Public Health Guidance for Community Level Preparedness and Response to Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome SARS www.cdc.gov/ncidod/sars/guidance/index.htm If such transmission recurs anywhere in the world CDC will promptly review all available information and provide additional guidance via the Health Alert Network HAN Epi X and partner organizations Current information will also be posted on CDC s SARS website www.cdc.gov/sars
