Investigating Sex José Pierre, 2014-04-03 Are women's orgasms more intense than men's? What did André Breton think of homosexuality? Can love be separated from physical desire? In 1928 a group of surrealist writers and artists held twelve round table discussions to address these questions. Calling them researches into sexuality, their bizarre and humorous conversations are now made available in this new edition in all their surreal and salacious detail. Their research spanned the most critical period for surrealism, a time of bitter political disputes echoed in the intensity of these meetings and in the range of participants including André Breton, Paul Eluard, Yves Tanguy, Benjamin Peret and Pierre Naville. Well before the so-called sexual revolution, their erotic exchanges broke sexual taboos and encouraged surrealists to openly share the libidinal themes they explored in their writing and art. In doing so, JoAnn Wypijewski writes in the new introduction, they are revealed as lovers and prigs, fantasists and humanists, adventurers in mind if not always in flesh, flawed, foolish, brilliant, clangingly sexual human beings.

Studies in the Psychology of Sex: Sexual inversion. 3d ed., rev. and enl. Havelock Ellis, 1915

Paradigms of Power Sharon W. Tiffany, 1985 This article addresses the epistemological problem in anthropology of women as Other, the subordinate, the muted, the peripheral, with particular reference to the ethnographic literature on Oceania. The ideas and images that form the value-loaded premise of women as Other reflect ongoing controversies about power, sex, and gender in the West, controversies that influence the discipline of anthropology in ways that feminists have yet to consider systematically. My purpose is to examine from a feminist perspective the paradigmatic problems of gender and politics in anthropology and to illustrate these problems with selected works that have influenced anthropological theory and Pacific ethnography This discussion will help provide feminists in other disciplines with background necessary for understanding the diverse contexts of gender relations across cultures and for assessing the epistemological problems confronting current anthropological research and discourse about women
