On the Cover, and Above:

The 1775 "Griffin Smooth Rifle" represents a high end product – and an important early rifle made by Christian Oerter in the Moravian gunshop at Christian's Spring, Pennsylvania, being signed and dated with location. This smooth rifle retains 95% of its original finish and most of the wire – a great gun to collect, enjoy and study!

We've been conditioned to view old rifles in black & white photos, but art, craft and longrifles were made to be viewed in the hand and in color. The subtlety of hattersconch in the maple with a shiny red varnish above show depth and variation, while bold brass and silver ribbon, fanciful carving, initialed patchbox and large silver star with fine engraving demonstrate the full range of the makers' talents. Previously known Oerter rifles used wire in lieu of carving – but yes, he could carve! The griffin with beak and claws of bone and a silver nail for the eye show creativity. Various carving techniques create a layered appearance of feathers on the body and wings, and make us wonder what else came from the shop!

About this Second Edition:

In 1980, George Shumway published the first of his monumental, two volume Rifles of Colonial America. This in-depth look at rifles and gunmaking in early America brought together George's "painted light" photographs of many rifles with what was known about individual gunmakers and regional "schools" or styles of work. It was George's wish that the books would encourage further research and bring to light additional early rifles. This new edition helps to further that goal.

CCTP Publishing and George Shumway Publisher have collaborated to produce this revised and expanded edition, with a substantial number of the rifles re-photographed in color. Access to rifles and photographs from organizations auction houses, museums, and private collectors made this possible, and the latest photographic and printing technologies were applied. Where color photographs of rifles were not available, black and white originals were scanned and enhanced for improved quality.

Significant new research has also been added, along with ten previously unknown or unpublished rifles, also in full color.
