Abstract: The essay traces the evolution of the Eurasian regionalism over the last three decades. It focuses on the inherent contradictions between the centripetal market forces and the geopolitical clashes affecting the economic integration perspectives. In Eurasia, economic integration has been repeatedly reinterpreted in terms of geopolitical power; at the same time, economic interaction emerged across the politically motivated boundaries.

Keywords: Eurasian regionalism; geopolitical competition; Eurasian Economic Union; Belt and Road

1 Emergence of the Eurasian Economic Integration

While referring to the ‘Eurasian’ regional economic integration, scholars typically consider one of two interrelated integration processes, which developed since early 1990s. Both of them were triggered by the collapse of the Communist block: however, while the first (‘narrow Eurasia’) was associated with attempts to preserve and to restore economic ties across former Communist states and Soviet republics, the second one (‘broader Eurasia’) focused on creating economic ties across the entire Eurasian landmass, connecting the EU with Russia, China, India and Southeast Asia. Both integration processes were to some extent linked to each other: without effective integration in the ‘narrow Eurasia’, protectionist policies of former Soviet republics would have diminished the feasibility of transcontinental linkages.

The initial rationale for the economic integration in the ‘narrow Eurasia’ was associated with high economic interdependence existing across post-Communist countries. Soviet-style planned economy heavily relied on creating value chains, where each enterprise had a unique monopolistic position due to extremely high asset specificity: thus, a Russian company could have been unable to survive without

Rise Of European Regionalism:

Regions and Regionalism in Europe Michael Keating, 2004 The last half century has seen the rise across Europe of a new intermediate level of government and politics usually referred to as a region However the term region means many different things and can be approached from many different angles geographical historical cultural social economic and political Although it is in Europe that regionalism as a multiform phenomenon has developed furthest the European experience resonates in other parts of the world where some of these elements also exist In this volume Michael Keating has selected some of the most significant previously published articles which provide a comprehensive overview of past and current thinking on this subject

European Regional Growth Bernard Fingleton, 2013-06-29 Looking into the future and trying to visualize long run regional disparities is difficult There is no agreed single theory to guide our model building although some insight can be gained from analysis of the past and by looking at the different theoretical positions to see if there is any agreement at least in terms of outcome if not in terms of mechanism This is what is attempted in this book which brings together specialists with a common interest in European regional growth and in applying quantitative analytical and simulation techniques in order to provide different perspectives on the topic Many of the Chapters in the book employ the methods of spatial econometrics Spatial econometrics is a suite of statistical and econometric tools dedicated to the analysis of spatial data in other words data that is set within the context of socio-economic theories and which can be represented most informatively in mapped form These methods have emerged over the last half century from a series of influential papers and books in the fields of regional science spatial statistics and quantitative geography and are ripe for serious application in the context of the EU's development In particular they provide the means by which to analyze spatially indexed data where the time dimension is essentially suppressed because for instance the variables of interest are not available or are of questionable accuracy which is often the case when one is interested in regional rather than national variations across a number of countries

The New Regionalism in Western Europe Michael Keating, 1998 In the 1990s the states of Western Europe faced twin challenges from above in the shape of globalization and European integration and from below in the form of new regionalist movements In this authoritative book Michael Keating traces the historical origins of regionalism showing that territorial politics has always been a feature of the West European state Then he analyses the post war model of territorial management in the Keynesian welfare state and shows how current trends are re shaping the meaning of political space and encouraging new forms of political mobilization and action This new regionalism is no longer contained within the nation state so that regions must face the global market and an integrating Europe directly Professor Keating argues that regionalism is a complex phenomenon spanning culture economics politics and policy It takes different forms in different settings shaped by the imperatives of economic competition in a global age as well as by political forces within the regions themselves There is a discussion of regionalism as a strategy for economic development of the emergence of a regional level of government and of regions with the European Union The New Regionalism in Western Europe will be essential reading for academics and students interested in European politics future integration within the European Union and European political history

Christopoulos, 2018-02-06 This title was first published in 2001 In the framework of the EU a number of policies have been devised for regions in order to facilitate their balanced economic development The author argues that the focus on regional planners and their actions in academic literature has obscured the importance of regional elites in this process The author compares Western Scotland and the west of Crete focusing on the wider regional political and business elites within these regions and attempting a comparison of elite attitudes within regions and between regions Cities And The Rise Of States In Europe, A.d. 1000 To 1800 Charles Tilly, Willem Pieter Blockmans, Wim P Blockmans, 1994-10-20 The rise of large powerful states in Europe after 1000 a.d transformed life across the Continent and eventually through the whole world The new European states disposed of unprecedented stores of capital and vast military capacities In recent decades scholars have often drawn general models of state formation from the European experience after 1700 then applied them with only partial success to other parts of the world Although such studies of modern Europe improved on early theories of modernization and development they failed to accommodate the varied ways in which city states empires federations centralized states and other forms of government evolved and the pivotal role that cities played in the multiple paths to state formation In a sweeping original work detailing eight centuries of city state relations Charles Tilly Wim P Blockmans and their contributors document differences in political trajectories from one part of Europe to another and provide authoritative surveys of urbanization in nine major regions they also suggest many correctives to previous analyses of state formation They show that the variable distribution of cities significantly and independently constrained state formation and that states grew differently according to the character of urban networks in a given region Their systematic study shows that unilinear models of state transformation underestimate the contingency and variability of popular and elite compliance with state building activities The book's findings offer important implications for the nature of economy sovereignty warfare state power and social change throughout the world Regional Institutions and Governance in the European Union José María Magone, 2003-08-30 Highlights some of the problems involved in the integration of regional national and supranational levels of governance in the European Union Europa Ethnica, 1987 European Access, 1997 European Regional Policy Marco Schaub, 2004 This work aims to analyze the impact of both the increased structural transfers and the more decentralized regional policy process through the partnership principle which were the two main features of the 1988

European regional policy reform In doing so Schaub examines the following questions What has been the impact of European structural transfers on the convergence process of the poorer southern European regions Has the partnership principle effectively enhanced the performance of regional institutions in cohesion policy Among the topics covered are economic integration and European regional policy convergence modeling of financial transfers on the macro level methodological aspects of the convergence model empirical results of convergence in the southern European regions modeling institutional performance on the micro level methodological aspects of analyzing institutional performance Andalusia and European fund issues the rise of a weak regional base in Algarve and a comparison of the cases of Andalusia and Algarve The Rise of the Networking Region Are Vegard Haug, 2016-02-17 How regions and cities adapt to a Network Society and a globalized environment the policies they pursue and how structures of governance are transformed in the pursuit of those policies are major themes in this volume These issues are addressed with specific reference to the Nordic regions of Europe Covering the four Nordic countries of Denmark Finland Norway and Sweden plus the Faroe Islands this volume charts the changes in networking activities and related development initiatives that have taken place over the last ten years This means analysing regions in their pursuit of new policies partnerships and styles of representation Through this process regions are becoming partners and players in European integration and a movement of integrative regionalism is taking shape which is different from inward looking identity regionalism or self centred competitive regionalism and takes regions beyond lobbying in Brussels
