State Responsibility for 'Modern Slavery' in Human Rights Law Marija Jovanovic, 2023-01-18 What is modern slavery and who is responsible for it What is the relevance of human rights law which primarily regulates state conduct for practices predominantly committed by private actors Where can victims seek justice and redress when national authorities fail to protect them These questions are the core focus of this book Marija Jovanovich analyses the role and responsibility of states for addressing modern slavery a diverse set of practices usually perpetrated by non state actors against the backdrop of international human rights law It explores the dynamic between criminal law and human rights law and reveals the different ways these legal domains work to secure justice for victims The book considers the absolute nature of the prohibition of modern slavery in human rights law the range of practices covered by this umbrella term and their mutual relationships the positive obligations of states established by international human rights tribunals owed to individuals subject to modern slavery and the standards for assessing state responsibility in these situations By engaging with the concept of exploitation in human rights law Jovanovich glues together diverse practices of modern slavery including servitude forced labour and human trafficking into a coherent concept The book elucidates the theoretical foundations of this fundamental human right and explains why human trafficking has an independent place within it In addition to providing a comprehensive critique of the existing human rights jurisprudence this book offers a roadmap for the future development of law on this subject emphasizing the limits of human rights law as a tool for addressing modern slavery
