

Context

- Ghana is a Democratic Republic on Southern Coast of West Africa
- Population is about 30 million and 3.5 persons/household
- Stunting prevalence for children under five years of age in Ghana declined from 28% in 2008 to 18% in 2017, a remarkable reduction.
- On the contrary, child anaemia prevalence only declined from 76% to 66% over the same period.
- These changes occurred within a socioeconomic context presumably favorable to nutrition outcomes – GDP growth, improvements in infrastructure (roads, electricity) as well as improvements in key social services such as access to water and sanitation, health care, and education services, and overall reductions in poverty, maternal and child mortality, disease burden, hunger and undernutrition.
- The study aimed to better understand why and how these changes occurred.

Nair,1980 Rapid Population Growth in Sub-Saharan Africa Rashid Faruquee,Ravi Gulhati,1983 Substantial social and economic progress in sub Saharan Africa during the past 15 years has not altered the traditional regime of very high fertility Explanations for this paradox have to turn to broad societal characteristics not captured by multivariate analysis of the household level The search for physical survival promotes a very large family norm High fertility may also reflect the predicament of the African woman This paper argues that enough is known to provide a reliable basis for policies aimed at reducing fertility The case for such policies rests on evidence that the challenge posed by accelerating population growth in Africa has not elicited a commensurate response in the form of technological or organizational progress Instead growing population numbers have accentuated the food deficit magnified the budgetary problem of financing basic needs services and complicated the employment issue The paper projects future population growth of nine sample countries accounting for two thirds of Africa s total population on the basis of four sets of assumptions These exercises confirm the desirability of action by African governments to reduce fertility

Migration in Africa Michiel de Haas,Ewout Frankema,2022-03-30 This book introduces readers to the age of intra African migration a period from the mid 19th century onward in which the center of gravity of African migration moved decisively inward Most books tend to zoom in on Africa s external migration during the earlier intercontinental slave trades and the more recent outmigration to the Global North but this book argues that migration within the continent has been far more central to the lives of Africans over the course of the last two centuries The book demonstrates that only by taking a broad historical and continent wide perspective can we understand the distinctions between the more immediate drivers of migration and deeper patterns of change over time During the 19th century Africa s external slave trades gradually declined whilst Africa s expanding commodity export sectors drew in domestic labor This led to an era of heightened mobility within the region marked by rapidly rising and vanishing migratory flows increasingly diversified landscapes of migration systems and profound long term shifts in the wider patterns of migration This era of inward focused mobility reduced with a resurgence of outmigration after 1960 when Africans became more deliberate in search of extra continental destinations with new diaspora communities emerging specifically in the Global North Broad ranging in its temporal spatial and thematic coverage this book provides students and researchers with the perfect introduction to age of intra African migration

Handbuch der Dritten Welt: Westafrika und Zentralafrika Dieter Nohlen, Franz Nuscheler, 1982 Population Growth and Policies in Sub-Saharan Africa, 1986 For sub Saharan Africa the need for reductions in population growth rates is a critical component in achieving greater economic development and higher standards of living Correspondingly the present report focuses on the economic consequences of rapid population growth in Africa and on policies and programs to reduce it The report basically has three themes The first theme centers on the deep concern that rapid population growth in Africa is slowing development and sharply reducing the possibility of raising living standards The second theme revolves around the recent evidence of the change in ideas and behavior regarding fertility With more and more governments expressing concern over the issue the idea of family planning is gaining acceptance Finally the last theme concerns the involvement of Governments in the development of population policy and programmes If progress in population policy is to be rapid and programs are to expand steadily some strategic reorientation of the direction and nature of government involvement is needed Slowing population growth in the next few decades as part of broader development strategies can help to relieve poverty and raise living standards for Africa s people

Mortality and Society in Sub-Saharan Africa Etienne Van de Walle, Gilles Pison, Mpembele Sala-Diakanda, 1992 This volume examines the respective roles played by custom socioeconomic variables and access to health services in providing the social context of mortality It uses a variety of data sets and statistical approaches to study the mechanisms of mortality through an examination of the aetiology of the principal diseases which affect children in Africa It raises fundamental questions about the relation between socioeconomic development public health policies and the course of mortality at a time when a concern about crises drought famine AIDS and economic problems has been dominant and examines the possible impact of the change in social arrangements which Africa is undergoing particularly in the area of family relationships and childrearing and the adaptation of social systems A major theme is a plea for better data to evaluate health policies The book will be of interest to social scientists and planners as well as to demographers JOURNAL OF BIOSOCIAL SCIENCE ,1986 A - Airports British Library,2012-05-21 No detailed description available for A Airports
