Pesticides In The Environment Volume 1 Part2:

Toxicology of Insecticides Fumio Matsumura, 2012-12-06 Why are books written Since I have read many works by my colleagues with admiration this question has always intrigued me Further writing a book takes a good deal of time and effort and I had imagined that I would never undertake such a demanding task A few unexpected events and circumstances have changed my mind The first was the pleasant experience of editing Environmental Toxicology of Pesticides with Drs Mallory Boush and Tomomasa Misato This fine symposium volume occasioned many interesting responses including a suggestion to prepare a more complete treatise on the grounds that such proceedings volumes by their very nature do not satisfactorily offer a complete and coherent description of the field but cater chiefly to specialists I myself prefer single authored books for basic understanding of a scientific field The second circumstance leading to the present volume was the availability of teaching notes from my course on the toxicology of insecticides As the need to cultivate environmental awareness has increased there has been a parallel increase in the enrolments of such courses both here and in other major institutions Yet no comprehensive and up to date text has been available The third factor which facilitated the effort was an especially pleasant sabbatical in Hawaii where the availability of the excellent Hamilton Library at the University of Hawaii considerably eased my task

Genotoxic Effects of Airborne Agents Raymond R. Tice, Daniel L. Costa, Karen M. Schaich, 2012-12-06 For at least 40 years there has been a great interest in the problems created by infectious airborne agents and other toxic substances transported through the air During the Second World War this problem grew out of the very high incidence of upper respiratory infections appearing in new military recruits who were brought together in very large open quarters As a result very interesting methods were developed to measure these airborne agents especially bacteria and some important methods were refined for their control These methods primarily concentrated on ultraviolet radiation propylene glycol and other means to reduce the dust in an environment Because of the specialized circumstances at that time the whole consideration of airborne particles became prominent Now with the new strides in the recognition of mutagenic and carcinogenic effects attributed to exposure to airborne chemicals from today's technology the problem has again become quite prominent The development of experimental chambers has made it possible to conduct studies under carefully controlled conditions
