

INFORMATION SOCIETIES

An information society is a society where electronic information technology mainly facilitates the production, distribution, and consumption of goods and services.

OVERVIEW

An information society is a knowledge-based economy, where work processes are integrated with information technology and communication networks. This integration of IT into social and business practices of a society creates new opportunities for consumption and distribution, as seen in the rise of e-commerce.

FEATURES

- Ubiquitous access to information
- Digital communication
- Knowledge-based economy
- Technological innovation
- Global interconnectedness
