

In vitro fertilization

In vitro fertilization is an assisted reproductive method that allows conceiving children for couples with fertility problems. It consists mainly in extracting oocytes from a woman and sperm from a man, achieve fertilization in a laboratory, and introducing the new fertilized ovule in the uterus of the woman so it can continue its development normally.

40%
of the pregnancies achieved by in vitro fertilization have a good ending.

1 Oocyte extraction

The first step to achieve an in vitro fertilization is to obtain suitable oocytes and in a quantity enough to be fertilized. That can be achieved by the application of abundant hormones during several days.

2 Oocyte extraction

Once matured, the oocytes are extracted via vagina by aspiration.

3 Sperm selection

Once the most suitable oocytes are identified, they are fertilized in a laboratory with sperm from the future father.

4 Fertilization

5 First embryo

From the moment of fertilization, the embryo is watched and cared for by the medical personnel.

6 Cleavage

After 12 hours, the first cellular division takes place.

7 Morula

When it has around 16 and 32 cells, it becomes the morula of morula.

8 Implantation

The selected embryos are transferred to the uterus of the mother through the vagina, using a catheter. From this moment on, the pregnancy will continue its evolution.

MULTIPLE

To increase the possibilities of pregnancy, several embryos are usually introduced in the maternal uterus.

manner and is thus to be regarded as a point of departure for future work as much as a brief summary of attained results The necessary limits of the volume have imposed restrictions which have permitted scant justice to numerous excellent pieces of work with which all special students are familiar for this the absence of textbook intention and style may perhaps be additional excuse The part of the subject that deals with the basis of biparental inheritance is purposely treated more summarily than other problems because so much that is really extraneous to the problem of fertilization proper is involved in the discussion The inevitable conflict between the strictly biological and the physicochemical methods of analysis of biological problems emerges in typical form in the problems of fertilization It is the writer's opinion that it will long continue to exist but that there is an ultimate reconciliation if not in sight at least in prospect on logical grounds An equal hospitality to the results of both methods of inquiry is therefore adopted The tendency toward excessive simplification of the physicochemical school is constantly being checked by the biological school and the conservatism of the latter has been more than once rudely shaken by the former About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy In rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition We do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works
