ABSTRACT - Basement makes up a distinct and separate geological entity and is traditionally defined as being a complex composed of crystalline rocks that underlie a sedimentary basin. During the Dutch time, studies of basement rocks were commonly confined to petrological descriptions with limited tectonic syntheses. In the early postwar years, structural and tectonic studies of the basement in Timor have entered the scene. With the advent of plate tectonic theory, the interest in investigating the metamorphic basement in Indonesia has gained a new impulse. Modern and advanced techniques have been applied to unravel quantitatively the metamorphic environment and the succeeding uplift history that eventually results in the exposure of the complex on the earth surface.

A number of successful investigations have been carried out recently in the Banda Arc, Sulawesi and Central Java, from which the existing concept has been criticized. The thus invalidated concept on basement saying that basement should always be of pre-Tertiary ages and be of continental origin, is now challenged by the new facts obtained in the Banda Arc. In this arc, the metamorphites have been proven to be of an oceanic origin and the emplacement of hot "rejuvenated" Banda Sea crust has produced the youngest metamorphic rocks in the world.

Some examples of subduction and obduction related metamorphic basements, as well as the typical continental metamorphism, will be presented in this paper. A new perspective on how fundamental studies of metamorphic basements can be applied in geological exploration will be outlined. This will include suggestions to be practiced in basin studies and hydrocarbon exploration, gold occurrences in ophiolite terranes, and gemstone exploration. Hints on the application of metamorphism principles to studies like diagenesis, and coal and hydrocarbon maturation will also be presented.

INTRODUCTION

Basement forms a distinct and separate geological entity and is commonly perceived as being a complex composed of crystalline rocks that underlie a package of sedimentary sequences. Such a specific definition, however, does not apply for the same term used in volcanology and geological engineering practices. Hence, in most cases basement rocks sensu stricto are readily distinguishable from their cover rocks based on their petrological, structural and stratigraphical appearances. Like elsewhere in the world, either metamorphic or igneous or combined rocks make up most of the basements.

Studies in basement in Indonesia dated back at least since 1930's when Brouwer lead the expedition to Sulawesi and Lesser Sunda Islands, and Rutten to Seram. Several traverses and geological maps as well as a number of Ph.D. theses were produced during this period. To mention a few are Egeler (1947) and de Roever (1947) in Sulawesi, Tappenbeck (1940), De Roever (1940), van West (1941) and Simons (1940) in Timor, and Germersaad (1946) in Seram. These works consist of detailed petrological descriptions of each rock constituent with limited tectonic syntheses, mainly inspired by the Alpine geology.

The Origin of Arcs F.-C. Wezel, 2013-10-22 This volume contains a collection of papers presented as distinguished guest lectures at the International Conference on The Origin of Arcs held at the University of Urbino in September 1986 under the joint sponsorship of the European Union of Geosciences and the Italian Geological Society The workshop on island and mountain arcs has been organized with the aim of increasing our understanding of the intrinsic nature of orogenic and post orogenic processes on the basis of empiric factual data rather than particular theoretic models Quite often a trivial piece of field data appears to bear much more weight than many fascinating hypotheses put forward by the human mind This seems to be much more valid in geology where a special method is necessitated by the particular nature of the geological phenomena and the time concept Every general law deduced should be rooted in the study of the earth's development in geological time It is the editor's opinion that there must first be an inductive picture by means of geological methods and then it must be interpreted by geophysicists in the light of physical laws The geological method must serve besides to test the historical credibility of geophysical theories It is clear that these two methods the geological historical one and the geophysical one must be complementary and the one must not substitute the other Since the problem of the structure and origin of arcs is open to several solutions different factors being still unexplained all correctly deduced opinions are considered by the editor The contributors to this pre conference volume have been asked to present essential geological results as concrete as possible on some basic problems such as Are the island and mountain arcs primary or induced features How have these orogenic festoons developed into their similar regular shapes What are the relationships between primary active arcs and secondary mountain arcs What is the dominant deformational factor in the bulging of the arc What is the real nature and tectonic significance of the Benioff zone These papers have been grouped into five more or less natural sections of which three are defined on the basis of geography But of course several range broadly and the classification serves only to channel the discussion in a practical way
