Proceedings of the Summer Institute on Biological Control of Plant Insects and Diseases Fowden G. Maxwell, Frank Aubrey Harris, 1974 Pest management history current status and future progress Ecological principles as a basis for pest management in the agroecosystem Populations defined and approaches to measuring population The life system concept as a guide to understanding population dynamics Status of biological control procedures that involve parasites and predators Identification and classification in pest management control Criteria for determination of candidate hosts and for selection of biotic agents Foreign exploration and importation of exotic arthropod parasites and predators Production and supplemental releases of parasites and predators for control of insect and spider mite pests of crops Bibliography of Agriculture with Subject Index ,1975-05 Bibliography of Agriculture ,1975-07 Entomology Cedric Gillot, 2013-03-14 The idea of writing this book was conceived when in the late 1960s I began teaching a senior undergraduate class in general entomology I soon realized that there was no suitable text for the class I intended to give The so called general or introductory texts reflected the traditional taxonomic approach to entomology and contained relatively little information on the physiology and ecology of insects This does not mean that there were no books containing such information There were several but these were so specialized and de tailed that their use in an introductory class was limited I hold a strong belief that an undergraduate general entomology course should provide a balanced treatment of the subject Thus although some time should be devoted to taxonomy including identification best done in the laboratory using primar ily material which students themselves have collected supplemented with specimens from the general collection appropriate time should be given also to discussion of the evolution development physiology and ecology of in sects In the latter category I include the interactions between insects and Man because it is important to stress that these interactions follow normal ecological principles Naturally the format of this book reflects this belief The book has been arranged in four sections each of which necessarily overlaps with the others Proceedings of the International Symposium on Biological Control of Weeds ,1976
