Personality Of The Cat:

The Personality of the Cat Brandt Aymar, 1958 Cat Signs Russell Grant, Judy Martin, 1988-11 What to expect from cats born under different signs of the zodiac and what they'll expect from you Cat and Human Personality Saethra Darling, 2020 Recent decades have seen a surge of interest in animal personality. Most recently we have begun to investigate the personalities of pet animals and while most work has been done with pet dogs research into cat personality is increasing often with the goal of improving their welfare. This dissertation first examines a current cat personality measurement program Feline ality™ designed to improve adoption rates and decrease euthanasia rates followed by an evaluation of associations between human and cat personality traits that might predict cat owners' satisfaction with and attachment to their cats. In the first chapter I consider the possible relationship between the personality dimensions measured by the Feline ality™ behavioral assay and subject variables of cats' age, sex, color. I then investigate elements of the convergent validity of Feline ality™ by comparing it with an established survey-based human personality measurement tool IAS-R. Finally in an effort to address possible confirmation bias in the survey measurement of cat personality I evaluate relationships between the survey measure and cat signalment variables. Results indicate that neither Feline ality™ nor the IAS-R correlate with cat age, sex, or color nor was there evidence of confirmation bias in the survey. The two personality dimensions measured by Feline ality™ were strongly correlated with each other and one was moderately correlated with a similar dimension of the IAS-R. The second chapter describes process and outcome evaluations of Feline ality™ following its implementation at the Seattle Animal Shelter (SAS). Feline ality™ was practiced at SAS in 2017. I consider data from a five-year span 2015-2019 in order to evaluate any changes in cat adoption rates, euthanasia rates, return rates, and length of time spent in the shelter that could be attributed to Feline ality™. I also examine process errors. Results indicate an extremely high error rate in implementation of the program such that no changes in any outcomes could be reliably attributed to Feline ality™. It should be noted that errors in the Feline ality™ data were corrected prior to analysis in our first chapter. Chapter three returns to a consideration of the IAS-R as a possible replacement for Feline ality™. The IAS-R measures two personality trait dimensions that characterize human interpersonal interactions: Agency and Communion and that have been previously demonstrated in cats. Zeigler-Hill & Highfill 2010. Similarity in Communion within cats' owner dyads as well as reciprocity in Agency was shown to predict owner-cat relationship satisfaction. Zeigler-Hill & Highfill 2010. Using a large internet dataset I attempted to replicate this finding. I extended the replication to include variables suggested by the original authors: cat age and cat sex and looked not only at relationship satisfaction but also at owner attachment to their cats. Results indicate partial replication: similarity in Communion was positively correlated with relationship satisfaction though with a small effect size. Neither similarities nor differences in Agency or Communion were related to attachment although relationship satisfaction and attachment were strongly correlated. The final chapter begins with further exploratory analyses of the dataset used in the previous chapter In this instance I examined not only intradyadic similarities and differences in Agency and Communion between cats and their owners but also individual cat and human scores on each dimension independent of and in interaction with each other along with years of ownership as a control cat age cat sex all in both linear and curvilinear relation to relationship satisfaction and attachment The results of the exploratory analyses were then tested on a different dataset comprised of recently adopted cats in confirmatory analyses with the addition of a measurement of overall attitude towards pets as a control replacing years owned The results of the confirmatory analyses indicate that controlling for attitude towards pets only cat Agency was predictive of relationship satisfaction No other variable outside of attitude towards pets predicted attachment to pet cats I further describe important limitations in our field that include the lack of reliable and valid measurement tools for cat personality and the lack of a standardized nomenclature both of which are necessary for further advancement in this area of inquiry

Pilling,1885 Personality in Domestic Cats (Felis Catus) Rebecca Sandford Morgan,2010 Personality reflects consistent individual differences in behavior amongst members of a species To quantify this variation between individuals and to investigate the interplay between evolutionary context and personality a comparative approach has been adopted in the literature To assess personality in a variety of nonhuman animal species human personality methodologies have been adopted including subjective assessments psychometric analysis of these assessments and factor analysis to identify a multi dimensional personality structure In this dissertation I sought to contribute to this comparative discipline by providing a thorough and validated theory of domestic cat Felis catus personality The first study used subjective ratings by cat owners and factor analysis to describe the structure of cat personality Four personality factors emerged labeled Shyness Sociability Activity and Greedy The second study sought to validate these newly described personality factors by examining their ability to predict a cat s behavior in separate standardized test situations These test situations included presentation of a novel human a novel object and a simulated novel cat During these behavior tests high Shyness was associated with more time spent hiding and less time spent interacting with the novel stimuli Cats high on Sociability spent more time in close proximity to and interacting with the novel stimuli High Activity level was related to more struggling when being held by the novel human and more instances of peeking out of hiding when faced with a novel object High Greedy scores were associated with a general avoidance of novel stimuli The third study used the identified personality factors and a selection of the responses in the behavior tests to address a common cat stereotype is personality associated with coat color Cats were categorized for five coat color characteristics agouti coloration tabby pattern sex linked orange pigmentation dense dilute pigmentation white spotting The stereotype that nonagouti cats are more friendly was supported by their higher probability of engaging in positive social interactions with the novel human Evidence was also found for higher levels of Shyness amongst cats that exhibited a more wildtype appearance simultaneously exhibiting both agouti coloration and no sex linked orange pigmentation The results of this study indicate that cats do exhibit individual differences in behavior that are quantifiable and predictable based on their owners subjective assessments Cats of the World Eugenia Natoli,1988 Cat lovers will adore this lavishly illustrated full color celebration of their favorite pets The informative text features detailed chapters on different breeds and their special characteristics The Cat and the Human Imagination Katharine M. Rogers,1998 The Cat and the Human Imagination is a fascinating historical survey of the changing cultural attitudes towards cats and the myriad ways that they have been depicted in literature and art This book examines the changing images fertility goddess sly little predator agent of Satan avenging witness aristocrat friend spirit of the home bloodthirsty killer seductive female and relates them to the contexts in which they arose It also analyzes how human attitudes towards cats seem to have evolved in parallel with attitudes toward animals toward authority and toward gender Katharine M Rogers seeks out the cats who make appearances in an impressive range of literary and artistic works providing the first critical look at the symbolic functioning of cat characters in Poe's The Black Cat, Dickens's Bleak House and Zola's Therese Raquin among other literary works. The historical and artistic range covered is impressive, creating a rich compendium that is the ideal book the cat lover seeking a refreshingly substantial and scholarly work about this fascinating animal.
