Dieulafait,1873 Diamonds and Precious Stones; a Popular Account of Gems ... Louis Dieulafait,2013-09 This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book without typos from the publisher Not indexed Not illustrated 1876 edition Excerpt in contact with substances containing copper and which has absorbed a sufficient quantity of them to colour the entire mass with a cerulean hue more or less deep ENGRAVING UPON THE TURQUOISE The low degree of hardness possessed by the turquoise probably deterred the ancients from often engraving on this stone or it may be these specimens of antiquity have not been sufficiently durable to reach our time In either case there are very few engraved turquoises known Caire however cites a few In the Genevoso collection there is an amulet convex on one side and flat on the other showing upon one side an engraving of a veiled Diana holding two branches in her hands upon the other a sort of sistrum a star and a bee Greek letters are inscribed upon both faces The cabinet of the Duke of Orleans contained two engraved turquoises one representing Diana with her quiver upon her shoulder and the other the elder Faustina A turquoise in the gallery of Florence nearly as large as a small billiard ball is engraved with a head which is possibly that of Caesar but more probably of Tiberius The group which we have just examined comprehends a certain number of precious stones that may be easily confounded with each other or with certain other gems of which we have yet to speak As will be seen from the table at the end of the book in which are briefly stated the general characters of precious stones it is almost always possible to distinguish with tolerable facility those that at first sight might be confounded Thus the transparent and colourless corundum resembles the diamond the aquamarine the colourless spinel and the quartz Now the corundum has double refraction and the diamond simple refraction accordingly nothing
