Abbott, 2000-03 Among desert farmers of the prehistoric Southwest irrigation played a crucial role in the development of social complexity This innovative study examines the changing relationship between irrigation and community organization among the Hohokam and shows through ceramic data how that dynamic relationship influenced sociopolitical development David Abbott contends that reconstructions of Hohokam social patterns based solely on settlement pattern data provide limited insight into prehistoric social relationships By analyzing ceramic exchange patterns he provides complementary information that challenges existing models of sociopolitical organization among the Hohokam of central Arizona Through ceramic analyses from Classic period sites such as Pueblo Grande Abbott shows that ceramic production sources and exchange networks can be determined from the composition surface treatment attributes and size and shape of clay containers The distribution networks revealed by these analyses provide evidence for community boundaries and the web of social ties within them Abbott's meticulous research documents formerly unrecognized horizontal cohesiveness in Hohokam organizational structure and suggests how irrigation was woven into the fabric of their social evolution By demonstrating the contribution that ceramic research can make toward resolving issues about community organization this work expands the breadth and depth of pottery studies in the American Southwest the American Southwest Barbara J. Mills, Patricia L. Crown, 1995 Southwestern ceramics have always been admired for their variety and aesthetic beauty Although ceramics are most often used for placing the peoples who produced them in time they can also provide important clues to past economic organization This volume covers nearly 1000 years of southwestern prehistory and history focusing on ceramic production in a number of environmental and economic contexts It brings together the best of current research to illustrate the variation in the organization of production evident in this single geographic area The contributors use diverse research methods in their studies of vessel form and decoration All support the conclusion that the specialized production of ceramics for exchange beyond the household was widespread The first seven chapters focus on ceramic production in specific regions followed by three essays that re examine basic concepts and offer new perspectives Because previous studies of southwestern ceramics have focused more on distribution than production Ceramic Production in the American Southwest fills a long felt need for scholars in that region and offers a broad based perspective unique in the literature The Southwest lacked high levels of sociopolitical complexity and economic differentiation making this volume of special interest to scholars working in similar contexts and to those interested in craft production

CURRENT CONTENTS: Arts & Humanities -- Volume 15, Number 6, March 15, 1993. Geochemical Evidence for Long-Distance Exchange Michael D. Glascock, 2002-12-30 Studies of prehistoric exchange of goods provide information about the types of economic interaction social organization or political structures in which prehistoric peoples were engaged Long distance exchange is a special situation where the materials exchanged crossed significant boundaries whether they were geographic social political or otherwise By examining the types and quantities of goods exchanged along with the directions and distances they moved archaeologists are able to examine the dynamic properties of exchange systems i e how they operate and why they undergo change The purpose of this volume is to present a number of case studies of long distance exchange from around the world which demonstrate the use of geochemical analysis of artifacts to find evidence of exchange More important than the use of analytical technique employed or the types of artifacts studied are the interpretations themselves which illustrate that exchange studies are maturing and helping archaeologists to develop more accurate models of exchange Guide to Reprints 2002 Irene Izod, 2001-10
