

The agricultural revolution

The invention of agriculture and livestock breeding at the Neolithic (8,000 BC) was one of the key transformations in the history of humanity. For the first time, human beings developed permanent settlement patterns and became productive groups growing their own food. They stopped depending on what their surroundings offered them and started intervening in the production process. Gradually, they created a specialisation in the creation of tools and in division of tasks.

Food in the village

The division of work is a distinguishing feature of Neolithic settlements. Agriculture and stockbreeding required differentiated tasks that were scheduled through the year. Sowing and harvesting were the moments of greatest activity. Parallel to this, villagers added the grain, produced the containers to keep them, sheared the livestock and processed their meat.

Prehistoric Agricultural Development In The Northern Southwest

Prehistoric Agricultural Development In The Northern Southwest:

Prehistoric Agricultural Development in the Northern Southwest Michael A. Glassow, 1980 Perspectives On Southwestern Prehistory Paul Minnis, Charles L. Redman, 2019-05-28 Recent archaeological work in the American Southwest and Northern Mexico has fueled a great deal of regionally specific research; archaeologists faced with an avalanche of new and unassimilated data tend to focus on their own areas to the exclusion of the broader panregional view. Perspectives on Southwestern Prehistory advocates the larger framework. Prehistoric Agricultural Strategies in the Southwest Suzanne K. Fish, 1984 Archaeology of the High Plains James H. Gunnerson, 1987 The Late Archaic across the Borderlands Bradley J. Vierra, 2010-01-01 Why and when human societies shifted from nomadic hunting and gathering to settled agriculture engages the interest of scholars around the world. One of the most fruitful areas in which to study this issue is the North American Southwest where Late Archaic inhabitants of the Sonoran and Chihuahuan Deserts of Mexico, Arizona, and New Mexico turned to farming while their counterparts in Trans Pecos and South Texas continued to forage. By investigating the environmental, biological, and cultural factors that led to these differing patterns of development, we can identify some of the necessary conditions for the rise of agriculture and the corresponding evolution of village life. The twelve papers in this volume synthesize previous and ongoing research and offer new theoretical models to provide the most up-to-date picture of life during the Late Archaic from 3,000 to 1,500 years ago across the entire North American Borderlands. Some of the papers focus on specific research topics such as stone tool technology and mobility patterns. Others study the development of agriculture across whole regions within the Borderlands. The two concluding papers trace pan-regional patterns in the adoption of farming and also link them to the growth of agriculture in other parts of the world. Prehistory of the Southwest Linda S. Cordell, 1984 Life beyond the Boundaries Karen H. Berry, Sarah A. Herr, 2018-04-02 Life beyond the Boundaries explores identity formation on the edges of the ancient Southwest. Focusing on some of the more poorly understood regions including the Jornada Mogollon, the Gallina, and the Pimería Alta, the authors use methods drawn from material culture science, anthropology, and history to investigate themes related to the construction of social identity along the perimeters of the American Southwest. Through an archaeological lens, the volume examines the social experiences of people who lived in edge regions. Through mobility and the development of extensive social networks, people living in these areas were introduced to the ideas and practices of other cultural groups. As their spatial distances from core areas increased, the degree to which they participated in the economic, social, political, and ritual practices of ancestral core areas increasingly varied. As a result, the social identities of people living in edge zones were often, though not always, fluid and situational. Drawing on an increase of available information and bringing new attention to understudied areas, the book will be of interest to scholars of Southwestern archaeology and other researchers interested in the archaeology of low-populated and decentralized regions and identity formation. Life beyond the Boundaries considers the various roles that edge regions played.
