Piquero, David Weisburd, 2009-12-16 Quantitative criminology has certainly come a long way since I was first introduced to a largely qualitative criminology some 40 years ago when I was recruited to lead a task force on science and technology for the President's Commission on Law Enforcement and Administration of Justice At that time criminology was a very limited activity depending almost exclusively on the Uniform Crime Reports UCR initiated by the FBI in 1929 for measurement of crime based on victim reports to the police and on police arrests A typical mode of analysis was simple bivariate correlation Marvin Wolfgang and colleagues were making an important advance by tracking longitudinal data on arrests in Philadelphia an innovation that was widely appreciated And the field was very small I remember attending my first meeting of the American Society of Criminology in about 1968 in an anteroom at New York University there were about 25-30 people in attendance mostly sociologists with a few lawyers thrown in That Society today has over 3,000 members mostly now drawn from criminology which has established its own clear identity but augmented by a wide variety of disciplines that include statisticians economists demographers and even a few engineers This Handbook provides a remarkable testimony to the growth of that eld Following the maxim that if you can t measure it you can t understand it we have seen the early dissatisfaction with the UCR replaced by a wide variety of new approaches to measuring crime victimization and offending From Science to Action? 100 Years Later - Alcohol Policies Revisited

Alcohol, Young Persons and Violence Paul Williams, 2001 There is overwhelming evidence of a link between alcohol consumption and violent behaviour Although not fully understood it is widely accepted that levels of alcohol consumption and violence are higher among younger than older persons and particularly so among young males In 1999 the Australian Institute of Criminology hosted a Roundtable on the theme of Alcohol Young Persons and Violence Its purpose was to highlight new empirical data to explore innovative interventions and to inform the development of a National Alcohol Strategy This publication gathers together nine papers from that Roundtable as well as others related to the subject of alcohol young persons and violence These papers do not attempt to provide a comprehensive description of the extent and nature of the problem nor do they offer a prescriptive policy solution They do however provide examples of recent research and policy opportunities in the area and offer evidence which will contribute to the development of the National Alcohol Strategy Surveying Crime in the 21st Century Michael G. Maxfield, J. M. Hough, 2007 Since its first sweep in 1982 the British Crime Survey and its counterparts in the US and other nations have become invaluable sources of data for research and policy development In this book chapters by a distinguished international group of scholars describe key findings of national crime surveys in a variety of research and policy areas including international comparisons of victimization covariation of victimization and offending the measurement of police performance the impact of crime in different types of communities attitudes to crime and justice fear of crime and the unequal distribution of risk Though national crime surveys have made substantial contributions to knowledge according to the authors the surveys must adapt to changing circumstances if they are to continue to be of value Future directions include continuing to incorporate new technology in samples and survey designs broadening the focus beyond normal crimes and individual victims and producing better measures of crimes such as fraud organized crime corruption and Internet facilitated crime
