Policymaking In Japan Defining The Role Of Politicians:

Policymaking in Japan; Defining the Role of Politicians Nihon Kokusai Kōryū Sentā, 2002-06 A major evolution in Japan's system of governance has been taking place in recent years as politicians have increasingly begun to participate in the policymaking process where bureaucrats used to play the predominant role. The six chapters in this volume are written by members of the Diet from the Liberal Democratic Party and New Komeito parties. These members of the new generation of politicians in Japan are concerned about designing a new architecture for policymaking. Relations between politicians and bureaucrats and how those relations should be restructured are discussed. Restructuring the policymaking process also involves questions of the relationships between the prime minister and the governing party organizations, the role of Diet committees and the issue of staff support for politicians, parties, the Diet and the prime minister. Each chapter explores these and other policymaking matters in the context of a specific policy issue such as finance, information technology, public works, education and corporate policy. Chapters provide important insights into the substantive issue at hand and the policy process relating to it. Contributors include Japanese House of Representatives members Nemoto Takumi, Furukawa Motohisa, Ito Tatsuya, Maehara Seiji, Hase Hiroshi and Ueda Isamu.

The Subversive Activities Prevention Law of Japan Cecil H. Uyehara, 2010 The Subversive Activities Prevention Law (SAPL) was the last major controversial law to be drafted at the end of the Allied Occupation of Japan (1945-1952) which was managed and controlled by General Headquarters (GHQ) under U.S. General MacArthur and was enacted into law after Japan had regained its formal independence in 1952. Soon after the Occupation began, prewar Japanese internal security laws were ordered abolished by the Occupation. Now that Japan would be regaining its independence in 1952, there was urgency to creating a new integrated national internal security law to fill the vacuum created by the Occupation (1945-1952). The Subversive Activities Prevention Law was to be the centerpiece for maintaining internal security in the new independent Japan. It turned out to be an extremely controversial law that was vociferously opposed by the political opposition in and out of the Diet in light of the prewar history surrounding how such internal security laws were implemented by the state security apparatus. The demonstrations in 1951-52 against the proposed law, organized by the labor unions, were the largest, loudest and most determined since the end of the war. This publication is the first analysis in English on how this law was drafted and debated, supported and opposed, using the 20 drafts of the law and the subsequent deliberations concerning the proposed law in the Houses of Representatives and Councillors. A short epilogue, since over 50 years have elapsed since the law was initially enacted in 1952, analyzes the implementation of the law during these years. The Subversive Activities Prevention Law of Japan: Its Creation (1951-1952) will be of particular interest to those studying the Allied Occupation of Japan, the Japanese political and legislative process and its internal security laws.
