ABSTRACT

This article aims to determine council members' involvement in carrying out their duties and responsibilities related to community empowerment. Furthermore, to find out how council members maximize the potential of the region and its community with a power and policy approach. Political CSR is an inherent obligation of parliamentarians because the people elect them in a formal and legal context. The carried-out mandate should present full responsibility to struggle for the community's welfare in internal work as a legislative product holder and external work in serving the community. This research uses an intrinsic case study approach with the object of research on legislative members in the Grobogan Regency. The socio-political responsibilities of the parliamentarians will be studied based on the triple C approach; they are Community Relations, Community Empowerment, and Community Service. Community relations aim to foster a harmonious relationship between organizations (politicians) and the community to increase social awareness and mutual understanding. Community Empowerment is an effort to develop community potential and overcome existing societal problems. The involvement of council members in community empowerment is implemented in three stages: good community relations, community empowerment in the form of community advocacy, and creating an institution that educates the community and community service by prioritizing comprehensive services.

INTRODUCTION

The political adage says there are no true friends and opponents in politics, only real interests. Superficial understandings ignore critical reasoning related to political history, and the inside of various noble goals make a premature thesis of politics by dwarfing the issue only on power struggles. Politics should be positioned as a human effort by creating a state concept that produces social welfare based on justice and equality.

Like two coins that have two different sides, that is how politics is present in everyday life. The power struggle seems to extinguish the human instinct by defeating and punishing each other, which is the dark side that dominates the news so that it covers the bright side of politics in the form of social responsibility and a necessity to do the best for constituents in particular and society in general.

Humans as social beings have dependence and individual involvement with society in a social system where the spontaneous appreciation of individuals leads humans to discover the essence of usefulness for others. Apart from this, politicians are a small part of the humans who spontaneously appreciate the individual, so they must have concrete benefits in a social system.
